The Greg Page Stadium View Apartments were recently dedicated in honor of Page, UK's second black scholarship athlete, who died as a result of injuries he received while on the UK football team in 1967. Lester Boyd, a senior and co-captain of the present football team, greeted the Pages.

UK's Ag school program unbridled success

By DONNIE WARD
Staff Writer

This is the first article in a series of four dealing with UK's agriculture program.

UK's College of Agriculture has developed into one of the finest teaching and research facilities in the nation by combining its instruction, research and extension services to motivate students in the search for new knowledge.

Since its beginning in 1865, this unique educational system has expanded to over 1100 students, 185 faculty members, 350 employees, eight major campus buildings and more than 20,000 acres in farms and experimental stations throughout the state.

Beginning as a "Land-Grant College," — one was set-up in each state under the provisions of the Morrill Act of 1862 — the "Agricultural and Mechanical College" was established by the Kentucky legislature in 1865 and later became the University of Kentucky and its College of Agriculture, according to J. Allan Smith, author of many historical publications about UK.

"Despite its name, no courses in agriculture or mechanics were offered until 1878, when a 'Course of Instruction' in agriculture and horticulture was listed," Smith said.

The Hatch Act of 1887, which provides $15,000 in federal funds annually to the school, was passed to establish an experiment station in each state and to satisfy the need for expansion. These funds supplement state money for agricultural research performed in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) — research findings to be freely distributed.

"With these funds, the college was able to buy land near campus to be used for research," Smith said. "By 1950, 576 acres had been purchased just south of campus."

University growth brought construction of buildings on that property, creating a need for land expansion elsewhere, Smith added. As additional funds became available, Gov. A.B. Chandler arranged for the purchase of two farms in 1957 — Coldstream and adjoining Crown Crest Farm, just north of Lexington. This led to further land acquisition around Lexington and throughout Kentucky for agricultural study.

In 1914 Congress passed the Smith Lever Act establishing a nationwide Cooperative Extension Service to distribute research information. This tied federal, state and county governments together, including a network of county extension agents backed by state extension specialists in the Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics.

Today, the UK College of Agriculture is completely independent from the University. It is self-contained, having its own maintenance department (working with the UK Physical Plant Division) and a separate motor pool for transporting its extension people. The facilities and farmland belonging to UK's Ag school are listed below with their accompanying uses, as stated by George Pendergrass, management operations director:

CAMPUS laboratories are equipped for research in all program areas.

SOUTH FARM, located three miles south of Lexington on US 27, was purchased in 1956 and totals 190 acres. It provides research facilities for grain crops, fruits and vegetables, ornamental plants and tobacco.

COLDSTREAM, comprising 1153 acres, is divided into sections for studies in beef and dairy cattle, along with sheep and swine.

SPINDLETOP was acquired by UK in 1959. Veterinary sciences and agronomy operate 400 of Spindletop's 1,066 acres. Located at Spindletop is the Animal Care Center, Spindletop Hall Faculty Alumni Club, the Council of State Governors and the UK Research Foundation.

MAINE CHANCE constitutes 721 acres for horse research, riding, etc. This farm, ideal for equine studies and veterinary science, was purchased in 1967.

Homecoming game lacks artistry

By JOHN CLAY
Sports Editor

It wasn't pretty.

Everyone knows that homecoming games are supposed to be artistic, works of craft that everyone will remember for a long time. But chances are, most fans will plead amnesia when asked about UK's homecoming game last Saturday at Commonwealth Stadium.

Somehow, somehow, the Kentucky Wildcats muddled their way to a 20-14 victory over the Bowling Green Falcons. But it didn't come easy.

UK went into the locker room trailing the visitors from the Mid-American conference 7-6. But two minutes into the third quarter the Cats struck and struck quickly, scoring two touchdowns to take a 20-7 lead.

On the Cats' second play of the third quarter, freshman running back Pete Venable took a pitch from quarterback Juan Portela and sped 82 yards for a score to give UK a 12-7 lead.

A little over a minute later, Larry Carter returned a 66-yard punt for another touchdown and UK had exploded to a 20-7 lead. The Wildcats then held on to record their third victory in eight games.

Still, as UK coach Fran Currei said after the game, "It's nice to win, but really fellows, I wasn't very proud of the way we played today."

UK fumbled six times, losing three and the game's Most Valuable Player, Portela, completed just three-of-12 passes for 37 yards and rushed for just 42 yards on 11 carries.

An indication of the game's quality was the fact that the contest's third longest gainer was a fumble by Bowling Green quarterback Mike Wright that traveled 26 yards before the Wildcats finally pounced on it.

"That was as poor a first half as we've played since I've been at Kentucky," Currei said.

"And I don't have any reason for it," he continued, "except for the fact that we just keep changing people."

The Cats added seven more players to their injury list as Felix Wilson (bruised calf), Bob Fogle, Tim Gooch, Shawn Donigan (sprained ankles), Kevin Kearns (hyperextended knee) and Venable (bruised hip) all left the contest at one time or another.

No signs of campaign, but Collins confident

By H.B. FIELDS
Reporter

With the exception of a few political buttons, there was virtually no sign of a campaign-in-progress at Martha Layne Collins' office.

Work in the clerk of the Kentucky Supreme Court office, located in the state house at Frankfort, went on as usual. And surprisingly so. Tomorrow is the big election day.

"I feel good about my campaign," Collins, a UK graduate, said. "We're still working hard, though. We're keeping in touch with the voters."

Part of Collins' confidence can be attributed to her victory in the primary. She won a very close race against a field of eight male contenders. After the May 29 primary, her opponent's support went to her. Throughout her campaign, Collins has consistently advocated the need for more duties for the lieutenant governor's office. Currently the office has two part-time duties: presiding over the Senate during sessions of the General Assembly and filling in as acting governor if the governor is absent from the state or unable to perform his duties.

Besides serving on the executive cabinet, Collins wants the lieutenant governor to act as a liaison between state and local governments.

Hal Rogers, her Republican opponent, has also advocated expanding the office's role — or abolishing it. Rogers' plan is to head up economic development efforts, which he sees as being instrumental in creating more jobs.

On the other hand, Collins, a former teacher, stresses education. "I'm obviously interested in the economy," she said, "but do we have the education (ability) to train people for jobs?"

Earlier in the primary, Collins stated that she favored the idea of having a student serve on the state Board of Higher Education.

Democratic gubernatorial candidate John Y. Brown has said Collins would serve as chairman on his governor's task force on education.

Brown and Collins differ though on the issue of collective bargaining. Brown supports it, Collins is against it. However, Collins has reiterated that the disagreement is a healthy one.

Since both Collins and Brown are running on the same ticket, Collins uses Brown's business experience as an answer to Kentucky's economic problems.

"I'm running with a man whose forte is economic development," she said.

But what if Republican Louie B. Nunn wins?

"Well...I just don't feel that will happen," Collins said.

While the issue of youth has been ignored in this election, Collins says it is vital that young people be involved in government. She said that her having two teenagers proved she was interested in the youth and also cited her efforts to help the Young Democrats group increase its membership.

In the past, UK Student Government members have lobbied the Kentucky legislature on a number of issues such as the legal drinking age. Collins' advice for more effective lobbying was simple: "You've just got to be there."

As for lowering the drinking age, Collins said it is up to local governments to decide on that issue.

A resident of Versailles, Collins worked her way up through the Democratic party organization before being elected clerk of the Supreme Court. In 1971 she worked on Wendell Ford's gubernatorial campaign and later became a Democratic national committeewoman.

During the May primary campaign she avoided making a commitment on the Equal Rights Amendment. It wasn't until last month's televised debate with Rogers that she said she supported ERA.

Throughout her entire campaign, Collins has stressed that she "is running not because she is a woman," but as a candidate.

"I'm working diligently to help women," she said. "We have to provide opportunity to women, but women have to do their part to train themselves."

spokesman said he believed it was fewer than 45 — about 35 Americans and seven or eight Iranians.

A TWO-MONTH PROBE by the COURIER-JOURNAL has raised questions of football eligibility at the University of Louisville. In its editions today, the newspaper says the inquiry showed a pattern of apparent violations in areas involving individual players dating back to 1974.

The areas of The Courier-Journal inquiry involved "redshirting," the practice of holding a player out of competition in a given year to save a season of eligibility for future use, and "participation limits." According to the newspaper, redshirting practice appears to have been misunderstood or misrepresented in up to eight cases at Louisville in the past five years.

CALIFORNIA GOV. EDMUND G. BROWN JR. in New Orleans yesterday called on President Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy to engage in a series of debates with him prior to the nation's first presidential primary in New Hampshire.

Brown said it would be a profound disservice to the nation to confine the campaign to 30-second television commercials. Brown said the original proposal for such debates was put forth by Kennedy and Brown's staff has already been in contact with the president's people about the debate proposal.

"I think that if President Carter refuses to engage in debates that he will not be renominated," Brown said.

TWO BOLIVIAN AIR FORCE JET FIGHTERS roared over downtown La Paz, Bolivia yesterday with their guns blazing, scattering students and workers who had gathered in a central plaza to protest the 4-day-old military regime.

There were no immediate reports of casualties. It appeared that the pilots sought only to intimidate the civilians in San Francisco Plaza and did not fire directly at them.

The plaza was also surrounded by about 20 tanks and armored cars, and one was heard firing a cannon shot.

San Francisco Plaza is five blocks from the presidential palace, headquarters of Col. Alberto Natusch, who declared himself president after leading a coup against Bolivia's civilian government last Thursday.

Ammendments deserve attention to begin updating constitution

Physically, it takes about five minutes. Mentally, the time element varies according to an individual's speed in making decisions. As simple as it may sound, voting carries with it an important responsibility. It is the only means we, as citizens of Kentucky have with which to rid ourselves of poor politicians, to select those we feel might better serve us — in short to decide who we trust to run our state and local government for the next several years.

Kentucky politics, especially the gubernatorial election, is an issue across the nation. John Y. and Phyllis have been held up as objects of the sarcastic wit of Garry Trudeau in Doonesherry, a nationally syndicated cartoon.

Tomorrow, UK students, administrators, faculty and staff members can exercise their right to select Kentucky's government officials.

Or, they can leave the voting to the diminishing number of Kentuckians who care whose wallet their tax dollars are filling.

Voting precincts are nearby for on- and off-campus students and the campus population. There is no valid excuse for contracting the "apathetic voter" syndrome. Transportation to polling areas and other help is available — if individuals take the time to ask.

If the candidates for office don't inspire action, two important constitutional amendments are on the ballot. One will allow four — rather than the currently allowed two — constitutional amendments to be placed on the ballot every two years.

Amendment number two changes elections of Kentucky's general assembly members from odd to even-numbered years. It also extends the time the Legislature can meet to April 15, while the sessions would still consist of 60 days, spread over four months.

Parts of the state constitution are outdated; amendment number one would provide a speedy method of bringing new amendments before the voters. Amendment number two gives newly-elected legislators one year to prepare for the regular session. After being elected in November of even-numbered years, they would have a year to research and prepare bills. Under the present system, legislators are elected in November and have two months to prepare for the January session.

These two amendments are as important as the election itself; if Kentuckians vote yes they will be taking the first step toward updating the constitution. While the number of voters diminishes yearly, there are certain interest groups and loyal political party voters who will go to the precincts and support their candidate.

Take time to vote for the candidates and the amendments. Without the people's vote, state government will be ruled by interest groups.

Letters to the Editor

Provincial, proud

I was delighted to read John Scarborough's column in Wednesday's Kernel in which he commented on a recent trip to Canada. As a native of Hamilton, Ontario he has lived in Lexington for the past two and one-half years. I was both pleased and surprised to find such sensitive insights in this, the very heartland of Kentucky where little news of home filters through.

Opinions about nationalism differ greatly across Canada. As a member of the oft-quoted Anglophone majority of Southern Ontario, it was refreshing to note that Dr. Scarborough chose to include the views of the "Canadian minorities" who continually feel alienated from Central Canada, the Inuit (Eskimos), Quebecois, Maritimers and Westerners. He has captured a sense of the diversity yet strength of Canadian identity.

I commend him for making the effort to look past the similarities between our two countries to see the Canada that I know. As for "instant expertise," Dr. Scarborough, perhaps Time, the New York Times etc. can take a lesson from you, eh?

Disappointing

I and the twenty to twenty-five other couples I talked to were extremely disappointed with the Homecoming dance.

The band was misplaced from the Class of '54 25th reunion and the acoustics were of that era's quality! A little bit of the lights goes a long way, and let's find a band with some talent.

The concrete floor didn't do much for my shin splints, but complemented the pipes and heaters in the 50 foot ceiling. This room of the Hyatt Regency should be reserved for tropical plant sales and please, if that's the quality the SCB desires, let's stick to Memorial Coliseum for free.

The table reservation policy was, if anything, non-existent, for any bimbo could have taken the name-tag off the table (which happened in my case.) It was embarrassing telling three couples to move.

I didn't feel very ill Friday night, but upon admittance a plastic bracelet was clasped around my wrist similar to hospital admission procedure. This was a degrading display of one's age (it didn't even match my suit!!)

The beverage policy for non-drinkers was grossly discriminatory. At least soda should have been included in the exorbitant $7.00 price. (By the way, what did that cover — the raunchy room and talentless band?)

In conclusion, I had a great time Friday night, completely independent of the dance.

NAACP meeting

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People or NAACP as it is popularly known, is an interracial, interfaith, non-partisan, social action organization. It is one of the oldest civil rights organizations in the U.S., organized in 1909 for the purpose of eliminating racial discrimination against blacks and other minority groups.

Its objectives as stated in the College Chapter Constitution is "...to inform students of the problems affecting blacks and other minority groups; to advance the economic, educational, social and political status of black people and other minority groups and their harmonious cooperation with other people; to stimulate an appreciation of the black man's contribution to the civilization. To develop an intelligent, militant, effective leadership. These objectives shall be pursued in accordance with the policies of the Association within the framework of University regulations."

Therese Colton and Linda Johnson, chairpersons of the organizational committee for a College Chapter of NAACP are hosting two organizational meetings this week. The meetings will be held Monday, November 5th, and Thursday, November 8th from 4:00 to 5:30 pm in room 309 of the Student Center.

The bringing to bear of the prestige, experience, and expertise of a national organization such as NAACP will be instrumental in hastening the full integration of the University of Kentucky, the primary source of higher education in this state with a student body of only three percent black.

Consider these facts

John Y. Brown Jr. was a student in my party politics class in the University of Kentucky Political Science department in 1955. He was a good student, honest, honorable and tolerant. We undertook to educate statesmen at that time. Among our former students who have served notably are Ned Breathitt, John Breckinridge, Foster Ockerman and Judge Henry Meigs. John Y. Brown Jr. belongs to the same group. He studied the old politics and plenty of it was in evidence at UK at that time. I left my native state largely because of the character of political influence on University affairs.

Under Louie Nunn, state troops were brought to the University campus. An old politician, an appointee of Nunn, slugged a student.

Isn't it surprising that Mr. Nunn opposes collective bargaining for the profession of teaching, while he belongs to a mandatory closed shop, the Kentucky Bar Association? Voters may wish to consider these facts.

Reagan won't be Republican nominee, barring suicidal urge

Out in Las Vegas, Nevada, about two years ago I heard Ronald Reagan deliver a speech. As everybody knows, Reagan is a very good speaker. I thought it worthwhile to take good notes.

Which I did. I came home with four long yellow sheets covered with writing and when I looked the writing over I found that it consisted entirely of anecdotes, mostly stories about small businessmen caught up in the red tape and unconscious brutality of big government.

There were funny anecdotes too, funny because, of course, the audience did not consist of the victimized. Taken all together the anecdotes spelled out the following message: "Government is bad for you."

I didn't write anything about the speech because the anecdotes would have required too much space in the retelling and the message, while never explicitly stated, seemed to me simple-minded.

But just the other day, I heard Reagan speak again. To my astonishment, he gave the same speech, consisting almost entirely of the same anecdotes. There were the same pause lines, the same laugh lines. Afterwards, there was the same standing ovation.

braden report

Despite which, as I left the banquet room, I found myself convinced that this man is not going to be the Republican nominee.

Unless, of course, Republicans have a suicidal urge. Barring that possibility, it seems to me that before very long they are almost certain to be asking themselves whether they want to nominate a man who is essentially an entertainer.

Not that they don't owe him a lot for the entertainment. Reagan has been talking about freedom since 1964, and the stories have entertained a lot of people. But should we elect a man as head of the federal government whose only expressed philosophy about that government is contained in a string of anecdotes?

I'm sure that once Reagan announces, he will issue serious position papers written by serious members of his staff. But when he talks on his own during the campaign ahead, he will inevitably go back to what he's good at. Which is telling words.

I don't complain about his age. The National Institute on Aging has just released a survey showing that mental processes in some men, as determined by a test in logical reasoning, begins to deteriorate at the age of 70. That's how old Reagan would be if elected. The institute points out that some men do not show mental decline.

Nor do I worry about his experience, he hasn't had any in the areas that count. He's had no federal experience as have John Connally, Howard Baker and George Bush. He was a governor and, according to all reports, not a bad one. Though that was some time ago.

Though I'm loath to the point out to the Republicans that of all the people they might nominate would almost certainly appeal least to Democrats, Reagan is the man. The long years of denouncing government have made enemies as well as friends.

These drawbacks to Reagan's candidacy don't bother me. I pay no attention to them. Nor his assets. For the man is most likable. He is quite honestly friendly. He has never demonstrated a character flaw. He has never been accused of a shoddy deal. In all his years in politics, no opponent has ever cried foul.

But the fact is that I simply don't believe that Republicans, when they get down to the hard choice, will choose Reagan. He's been around too long; he's said the same thing for too long. He's an after-dinner speaker.

Kentucky's legislative races in the shadows

By HERBERT SPARROW
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFORT — Although tomorrow's races for Kentucky's legislature have been overshadowed by the gubernatorial election, the nature of the election could make them very important.

Democratic gubernatorial nominee John Y. Brown Jr. has vowed not to control the Legislature and says he will not meddle in its selection of leadership like previous governors.

Although many observers are skeptical of Brown's hands-off policy, they still believe the Legislature that convenes in Frankfort in January will be far more independent and have more responsibility thrust on it than any of its predecessors if Brown is governor.

And if Republican Louie B. Nunn wins, a Legislature that is already assured of being predominantly Democratic, will take on a much more independent position.

There are 48 Democrats unopposed for seats in the 100-member House of Representatives, while Democrats are guaranteed at least 20 of the 38 Senate seats.

All of the House seats are up for election, while half of the 19 Senate seats are being contested. There are 14 Democratic senators not facing election and six others who are unopposed.

There are five holdover Republican senators and two unopposed, while there are only 11 unopposed Republicans in the House.

Each party could pick up a few seats in both houses, but the party makeup — which showed a Democratic majority of 30-8 in the Senate and 78-22 in the House in the 1978 session — is expected to remain basically the same.

Among the close races are: —5th Senatorial District of western Kentucky, where incumbent Sen. Joe Wright, D-Harned, who is also seeking a leadership post, is facing a challenge by Leitchfield newspaper publisher Jim Allen. There has been some recent controversy over Allen's refusal to run new stories about the race, including his erroneous reference to Wright voting for a pay raise, and his initial refusal to accept an ad from Wright.

—11th Senatorial District in northern Kentucky, where Republican Jim Bunning, a Ft. Thomas city councilman and former star major league baseball pitcher, is trying to unseat Sen. Don Johnson, D-Ft. Thomas. Johnson switched parties two years ago after 13 years in the Senate as a Republican.

—17th Senatorial District in southeastern Kentucky, where Lakis Mavimidis, a Harlan scrap-metal dealer, is trying to put the district back in the Republican column against Rosspoint attorney Charles Berger, a Democrat. Incumbent Sen. Bert Ed Pollitt, D-Harlan, did not seek reelection.

—22nd House District, where incumbent Rep. Buel Guy, D-Scottsville faces a tough challenge from former Rep. Richard Turner of Tompkinsville.

—31st House District, where Rep. Mark O'Brien, D-Louisville is in trouble against Republican challenger Charlie Ricketts.

—33rd House District, where Rep. Bob Benson, D-Louisville, who has expressed interest in being House Speaker, must first fight off a stiff challenge from Republican Bob Heleinger.

—46th House District, where anti-busing activist Bill Kellerman is given a good chance at giving the district to the Democrats over incumbent Republican Harold Haering.

—66th House District, where former LRC intern Barry Caldwell of Villa Hills is given a good chance of unseating three-term incumbent Democrat Elmer Dietz of Ludlow.

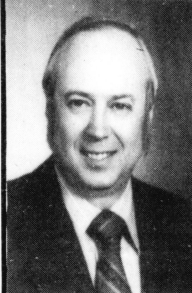

—87th House District, where two Pineville attorneys, Democrat Stephen Cawood and Republican John Rowland are locked in a close battle for the seat vacated by the retirement of Rep. George Stewart, D-Pineville.

In addition to some 320 research projects being conducted at these field laboratories, UK Agriculture conducts experiments on private farms in 68 counties throughout the state, according to Associate Dean for Research Oran Little.

"Studies on these field laboratories in western, eastern and central Kentucky are related to the particular soil type, terrain and characteristics common to each area," Little said.

Little explained the importance of instruction.

The Morrill, Hatch and Smith Lever Acts correspond to the areas of instruction, research and extension, respectively. They comprise a triangular system of education proven successful during the past century of UK Agriculture.

Instruction, research and extension will be further discussed in the next three parts of this series.

Curci and Portela's work pays off in Wildcats' win

By THOMAS CLARK
Associate Editor

Fran Curci was sitting on the floor of the locker room watching as the press swarmed around quarterback Juan Portela. An hour before the UK coach had been working his team down the field in an

"Even the people (in the stands) were dead today," continued the coach. "And that was our fault. We have to live them up and we did finally get them going."

Venable's electrifying run brought the fans out of a deep sleep and gave the Somerset native his first TD of the season.

"I was due a touchdown," Venable said. "It's been seven games and I knew it was mine. The players have been kind of riding me out about not scoring all season and they have been asking me when I was going to score."

"We didn't have anybody on the pitch," said Bowling Green coach Denny Stolz of the play. "We didn't think they'd get away from us."

Moments later Carter scored on his 60-yard jaunt, his third career touchdown.

However, Carter was not too sure that he could turn that particular punt into a score.

"The ball was pretty high and it was favoring to the right side of the field and I was thinking it would be pretty hard to work my way over to the wall," he explained.

"But when I caught the ball and looked up and saw the players spread out over the field, I thought there might be a chance. I was thinking about fair catching it at first. Glad I didn't now."

Although it was Carter and Venable's runs that gave UK its winning margin, it was Portela who received the MVP honors.

"It (the award) feels great," said the sophomore who replaced starter Terry Henry in the first quarter. "It was kind of a shock to me. I thought I had just played an average game but I must of played better than that."

Or everyone else played worse.

attempt to kill the clock and preserve a 20-14 victory over Bowling Green State University.

"I've been working harder this year than any other," he said. "We have no consistency. We've been giving battlefield commissions, jobs right on the spot. It's frustrating."

One of those "battlefield commissions" was given to Portela, a sophomore from Florida, when he replaced starting quarterback Terry Henry with a minute left in the first quarter. It was the kind of promotion that has become familiar during the Wildcat season.

"I took Terry out," said Curci, "because he looked like he was lost. Nothing was happening. I had to try and get his concentration back. I still think he's a good quarterback and a very, very good athlete."

"I didn't think I was going to get back in," Portela commented after receiving the homecoming game's Most Valuable Player award. "But I was preparing myself to get back in the game. Curci told me to warm up toward the end of the first half, but I still didn't expect to get in."

Portela, who had started against West Virginia and Mississippi, said the team's quarterback at the start of the season, Mike Shutt (who was moved to safety after a shoulder injury), has aided his cause. "He has helped me a lot. He kept telling me to be loose, that the nod was going to come. And sure enough it did."

"The first thing is just to get in there and get the snap from center," Portela said. "Mike said everything else would come, and it did."

On his first series, Portela and company moved from the UK 22-yard line to the Bowling Green 35 before the drive

Carter dedicates return to grandmother at home

By JOHN CLAY
Sports Editor

It seems that whenever Larry Carter has members of his family in the stands, good things are just bound to happen.

Last year, the Carter family from Inglewood, Tenn. made the trip to Blacksburg, Va. to watch UK play Virginia Tech. And they liked what they saw as their favorite relative returned a punt 88 yards for a touchdown in UK's 28-0 win over the Gobblers.

Saturday, nine members of Carter's family came up to Commonwealth Stadium for homecoming. And guess what? That's right, Carter took a punt 60 yards for a score (his third of his career) to help the Wildcats pull away with a 20-14 victory over the Bowling Green Falcons.

"I had a bunch of people up from North Carolina — they came from everywhere," said Carter.

But, it was the one relative who didn't make the trip that Carter dedicated the return to. "I had to do something for my grandmother," Carter said. "I've been thinking about her all week long. She's the sweetest lady in the world."

Carter's grandmother, Ruth Brock (about 68 or so says Carter) from back home in Inglewood has never seen her grandson play. Carter's grandfather died six months ago and the senior defensive back says that she doesn't like to get out too much.

"I wish she could have been able to here to see it," said Carter. "That's all I could think of, running down the field, was my grandmother, the whole way. She won't even get to come to the Tennessee game, I don't think."

Carter admitted that he had been thinking about her lately. "My family and everybody was here, but they had seen me play before and mamaw had never seen me play," he said. "And you know my career is coming to an end. All week long I've been thinking about her. I don't know why."

"When we were going out to the game, I was hoping I could do something for her today," he added.

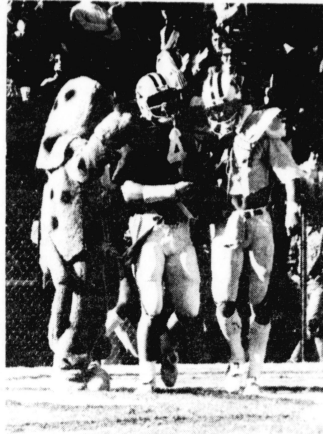

The defensive back said the hope soon turned into a feeling. "I swear I had a feeling, that's stupid to say every time, I get these dumb feelings," admitted Carter. "I told Ritchie Boyd before the game 'I'm going to break one today.' I wasn't cocky or confident or anything but I just felt like I was going to do something."

Boyd backed up his teammates claim.

"Coach (Jon) Mirilovich told us before the game that we hadn't had a cheap touchdown all year," Boyd said. "We hadn't gotten a touchdown on an interception, a fumble, we hadn't gotten one on a punt return. So we said 'Coach we'll get you one.'"

However, something else also fired Carter up.

"(Richard) Abraham singing the national anthem fired me up too," yelled Carter to the freshman defensive end's who gave a stirring rendition of the anthem before the game. "I about started crying. That was touching," smiled Carter. "Someone asked Carter if he would make sure and get his family up for the Wildcats' final home game against Tennessee. 'I wish they could come up if I get tickets for them. I hope they like end zone tickets,'" he said smiling.

Juan Portela gets MVP honors in Cats' victory over Falcons

 stalled when a pincushion lost five yards and a fumbled snap from center lost another two.

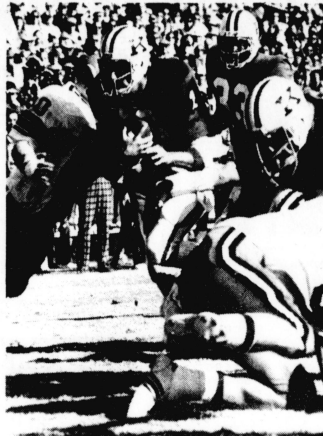

However, magic struck for Portela in the first series of downs in the second half when he pitched the ball to Pete Venable. The freshman halfback, although limping from a hip pointer, pranced around the end and took off down the right side for an 82-yard touchdown.

"It was an option play," Portela said, "and I pitched the ball right away. We had practiced it all week. We anticipated a hard end coming and he was there. It's a play of split-second timing."

Timing is something the Wildcats have lacked this year and, according to Curci, the reason is simple.

"You can't keep changing players and keep your timing. You can't change quarterbacks and backs and expect to keep it."

"This team had a chance to go to a bowl," he said a little wistfully, remembering any of his starting lineups. "But we sell programs," he laughed. "Without them you won't know who's playing."
