Maps will improve geography scores, professor predicts

By TIM JOHNSON
Staff Writer

Despite the recent low scores UK students received on tests of geography skills, faculty members of the department of geography say there is no correlation between the scores and the new map reading course which will be offered in the spring.

According to Stanley Brunn, chairman of the geography department, the new class has been in the making for nearly two years. "There is no correlation with the course and the test scores," Brunn said. "We do hope the students gain a better range of geographic skills, but we also hope they gain an appreciation of maps and mapmaking."

The course, GEO 105 Maps and Mapmakers, will be held from 9 to 10:45 a.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Karl Raitz, the professor who will be teaching the course, said, "Without a doubt, this class will raise the scores, but that wasn't the main reason for the class. I would like to see all students take this class so that they may have a basic knowledge where certain nations are when they read about them in the news."

Both Brunn and Raitz agreed the course should be a general studies requirement. "With the trust and faith which is put into maps and charts by most people, just like words in print, they should know what they are looking at and be able to understand it," Raitz said. The course will be divided into four major modules, Raitz said. After an introductory section, which will include the history of mapmaking, other sections will deal with the reading and understanding of different types of maps, including instrument reading, topographical and thematic map reading.

These kinds of maps, Raitz said, "are the climate, precipitation and dot maps which we all saw in fourth and fifth grade, but didn't know then, or now, the how or the what which goes into mapmaking."

"There are all kinds of ways to distort maps, and everyone should be able to distinguish between a correct map and one which is misleading," he said.

Although the class will be taught for the first time next spring, Raitz said "most of the rough spots will be over by the time class starts. We won't be treating the students like guinea pigs."

Raitz also has been honored with the National Teaching Achievement Award, given out annually by the National Council for Geographic Education. According to Raitz, the council divides North America and Canada into 10 regions, with one award given in each region. Raitz was the southeastern region award winner.

The award is "more of an acknowledgment of achievement than a monetary one," he said. "It is very nice to have the recognition."

The award includes a free one-year subscription to the council's magazine, one year free membership in the council and a plaque. Each year the council calls for regional nominations, which have to be supported with faculty, graduate and undergraduate recommendations.

"The award is an honor and a testimony to his teaching skills," Brunn said. "It is one of the best in the department."

"Good teachers take teaching seriously," he said. "And Professor Raitz is able to add enjoyment, for both himself and his students, with his serious approach to his profession."

Reverend talks on Catholic evangelists

Speaker emphasizes reaching out to the millions of inactive church members

By JOHN JURY
Staff Writer

More than 52 million Catholics in the United States today are active in their churches, but an estimated 15 million of them do not actively participate in church functions, according to Rev. Alvin A. Illig, C.S.P., in a speech to about 200 people at the Newman Center Friday.

Illig was the second of five speakers in the Newman Center's Distinguished Speakers Program. In order to reach these 15 million inactive, Illig said they must be "called to be enriched, to share Christ with others" in a teaching called evangelization.

"Over 80 percent of all people who begin a journey that leads them into the Catholic community began that journey because a friend, a relative or a neighbor extended a personal invitation to them... by inviting them to a mass or a social function or an educational function," Illig said.

Evangelists often perform good acts but also "get kicked in the teeth." However, "you'd be joining good company," said Illig, referring to Christ's crucifixion.

On college campuses around the country, Illig said there is "absolutely" no social pressure to attend mass. "If there's any social pressure, it's not to go to church."

Illig noted there are more inactive Catholics in the United States than the number of Southern Baptists — 14.8 million.

In 1947, according to a poll Illig quoted, 20 percent of all Americans were Catholic with 69 percent Protestant, 5 percent Jewish, 3 percent with no religious affiliation and 3 percent not answering.

Thirty-six years later, in 1983, the number of Catholics increased to 29 percent of the population and the number of those without an affiliation jumped to 9 percent. Protestants made up 57 percent, Jews 2 percent and no answers by 3 percent.

"Catholic evangelization is beginning to flower. We have the ability to evangelize," he said. "We, as Christians, extend invitations for those who wish to discover. You will touch the persons others cannot reach."

Born in Los Angeles, Illig, 58, was ordained in 1953 in the Congregation of St. Paul. In 1973, he moved to Pascagoula, Miss., where he became a Catholic evangelist among unchurched and inactive Catholics with a program called "Operation Share." He spent two years in Mississippi conducting parish groups of direct outreach to those who had no church family of their own.

In 1977, Illig traveled the United States as a spokesman for Pope Paul VI's Apostolic Exhortation, "Evangelization in the Modern World." In 1983, for this work, Illig received the Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice medal of Pope John Paul II.

Telecommunications department 'Career Day' to focus on student career goals, job market

By MICKEY MEECE
Staff Writer

Now is a good time to begin thinking about applying for that summer internship or preparing to enter the real-world job market. The telecommunications department wants to help.

The department is sponsoring a three-session "Career Day" on Nov. 14 in 228 Student Center, and students in all majors are invited to attend.

Rebecca Bakhaus, director of internships for the department of telecommunications, said the sessions should appeal to a universal audience. "Anyone would be interested, not just those in telecommunications."

Both Bakhaus and Thomas R. Donohue, director of telecommunications, encouraged students who are not majoring in communications to attend, especially those in business, marketing and sales.

"The younger are trying to make decisions on what direction to take, and the rising seniors might not know the specialized field they want to be in," she said. "They also want to know what the job market is like and how they can go about getting it."

While the sessions deal specifically with the field of telecommunications, Donohue stressed that the sessions will "have a fairly diverse appeal."

According to Donohue, the panelists will field questions on global issues, discuss what classes students should take and talk about what jobs are available.

Donohue said some issues that will be addressed are the changing employment prospects in the field, the future of the field and what types of people are best suited for the jobs.

"Electronic Media," in the first session, will run from 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. A panel consisting of Gwen French, program director of Tele-French, Ralph Gabbard, executive vice president of WKYT-TV, and Roger Koonee, from UK's office of instructional research, will field questions and discuss the future of electronic media.

The second session, Public Relations, will run from 1 p.m. to 2:30 p.m. Panel members are Faith Miller, public information director of the commonwealth of Kentucky, Tom Preston, from the Preston Corporation, and Ed Van Hook, from Kentucky Utilities.

The third session, about advertising, will be held from 3 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Woodford Dulaney, a Yale graduate and president of Dulaney Advertising Agency in Louisville, will give a presentation.

The reason for Career Day, he said, "is to give students personal recognition and contact." He said there is about a 100-to-1 faculty-student ratio for telecommunications majors.

"We are trying 'to personalize the department,'" Donohue said. "One who wants to have a good experience can have one."

Overworked imaginations

Psychologist explains how personal fears, guilt lead to experiences with supernatural phenomena

By TRINA JACKSON
Reporter

For those of you who have had the experience of seeing a ghost, it may not be what you think. Instead, it could be your personal problems and fears out to haunt you.

"People have many reasons for wanting to believe in ghosts," said UK psychologist Robert A. Baker. "Get people to talk about their problems, and persuade them to confront those problems, (and) they can tell the fears and ghosts to go away."

In an effort to relieve the misconceptions about ghosts and other supernatural experiences, Baker is working with volunteers from the Lexington area who claim to have had such experiences and want explanations. The most common experience of what he terms as "hypnagogic phenomena" (something that occurs during the drowsiness preceding sleep) is that of "deja vu," in which people claim to have experienced being at a place before. This, Baker says, is simply a person's strong imagination at work.

Another common claim is that of seeing images of dead people. Baker describes this as a person having unfinished business with the "dead person," which results in guilt feelings that show up in the form of a ghost. Usually, no one else can see the ghost except the person who is feeling the guilt.

"The problem is inside the person," Baker said. "I can't see your ghost, but you can. Demons only haunt people with the problem."

Baker studies the person's problem and its relation to his or her life history. Then, based on the person's experiences, he determines his or her needs. Once the problem is understood, the person can understand the source of the demon. Finally, in working with the needs and fear, the person is forced to confront the problem.

"Many unusual things that seem unexplainable should not be ruled out as normal before seeking a logical explanation," he said. "Resorting to the supernatural should be a last resort."

Such is the case with out-of-body experiences. This occurs most often during sleep, when the muscles of the body are so relaxed that it is easy to experience the feeling that, in leaving the body, you are floating in the air, Baker said. Many people who have this experience claim to wake up and find themselves floating near the top of the ceiling, while looking down at their bodies below them. Baker describes these experiences as hallucinations, caused by a lack of awareness of muscle relaxation.

Meijer, however, is still not satisfied.

"This campus could function as a teaching tool," he said. "The trees and the flowers can be used for teaching the students."

"The trees they cut down were worth money, some of them were more than 40 years old," Meijer said. "They could have been moved instead of cut down."

"My job should be not only showing dried plants, but also living plants," he said. "My concern is to be able to show them alive and keep them alive."

Carol Baskin, the secretary of the American Botanical Society and an adjunct assistant professor of biology, said, "We plan to restore what was there from seeds as much as possible, but it will take three to four years before we can plant these seedlings in the Mathews Garden."

Meijer said, "We want it restored, not moved further. Put a fence around it and the adjacent lot. If you include the lot next door, then some of the species that are now gone from the garden will be replaced."

Meijer said he will propose this to the committee.

Bowl-bound Cats capture second SEC game

Freshman Mark Higgs scampers 84 yards for a touchdown in Saturday's 27-18 win over Vanderbilt.

By WILLIE HIATT
Staff Writer

That the 27-18 win over Vanderbilt Saturday assured UK of a bowl bid is almost a given; some are talking Citrus Bowl, others, the Peach.

A bowl, nevertheless. The fact is, UK handled itself like a bowl team. Statistics hinted at it, but the enthusiasm made it undeniable.

The pervasive enthusiasm at Commonwealth Stadium Saturday couldn't be snuffed out by the wind or doused by the rain. There were almost as many high fives on the field as there were umbrellas in the stands.

UK seemed a different team from the one that played so poorly against LSU and Georgia.

"The biggest thing was we played with more intensity than we had since early in the season," Coach Jerry Claiborne said after the game. "With the exception of the win, that's what I enjoyed the most."

UK is now 7-2 overall and 2-2 in the Southeastern Conference. Vanderbilt's bowl hopes all but faded in dropping to 2-3 in the SEC. On Vanderbilt's second possession of the game, quarterback Kurt Page dropped back to pass on third-and-five and was sacked by linebacker Jeff Kremer and end Brian Williams for a 10-yard loss. That play seemed to set the tone.

As a result, UK got the ball on the Vanderbilt 44 and eight plays later, Bill Ransdell hit Joe Phillips for a 12-yard touchdown pass to put the Cats up 7-0.

But you might say that the Cats won despite the glorious Page (Kurt, that is) out of the Vanderbilt history book.

Page, who entered the game leading the SEC in total offense with 1,811 yards, engineered two first-half touchdown passes to keep the Cats in check.

His 37-yard pass to Joe Kelly, who broke open for a twisted Tony Mayes, and a 75-yard pass to Chuck Scott (the extra point was blocked by Russell Hairston) put the Commodores ahead 13-0.

"I thought with the exception of those two big plays our defense played pretty darn good," Claiborne said. "We played the run, pretty well. We kept them out of the end zone and that was the big thing."

Though Page was 31-for-49 for 347 yards, UK held Vanderbilt to only 53 yards rushing.

After the two touchdown passes by Page, UK's secondary went from man-to-man coverage to a zone. Page passed for 106 yards in the second half, but Vanderbilt managed only a field goal and a safety.

UK's go-ahead-to-stay touchdown came with 59 seconds left in the first half. The Cats had the ball on the Vanderbilt 18-yard line when Ransdell, looking to pass, was forced to scramble.

He was in Commodore clutches when he side-armed a pass to fullback Chris Derry on the 10, who carried it for a touchdown.

After the game, Derry gave a CBS "Chalkboard" account of the play without the chalkboard, CBS or John Madden.

"A linebacker came in and blitzed and it was nobody's pick-up, so I tried to hit him," Derry said. "I actually missed him and I was on the ground then. I got back up and saw Bill in trouble, and I just ran to where he could throw the ball to me."

And then boom! Ransdell hit Derry for the touchdown.

Ransdell connected on 20 of 31 passes for 195 yards in the game. Derry caught six of those for 66 yards, and Claiborne was asked if UK detected a lapse in the Vanderbilt defense that freed the fullback.

"We had planned to throw the ball to our fullback," Claiborne explained. "The next team we play may not give us that pass."

Then in darts Mark Higgs, who undermined both the Rutgers and Vanderbilt football teams.

On the first play of the second half, Higgs went off the right guard, was stuck by a linebacker ("It was a hard hit," he would say later), but bounced off and scooted 84 yards for the touchdown.

It was the longest UK run from scrimmage since Harry Jones ran 91 yards for a touchdown against George Washington in 1951.

"I felt like I owed the team to come back and have a good game because I was disappointed last week," Higgs said.

Higgs ran the ball 20 times for 128 yards. The touchdown gave UK a 21-14 lead.

UK's remaining points came on 49- and 50-yard field goals by freshman Joey Worley.

Skaters slide through Blue-White game

By ANDREW DAVIS
Senior Staff Writer

The temperature inside was colder than it was outside. Approximately 250 people braved the 32-degree arena temperature to witness the first game of the Cool Cats at the Lexington Ice Center and Sports Complex.

The Cool Cats, UK's new ice hockey club, held their Blue-White game Friday night in preparation for their season opener against the University of Cincinnati this weekend.

The Blue team skated away with a 12-4 victory over the White in a sometimes sloppy but well-played warm-up game, that seemed to confuse the most of crowd.

"It was faster than I expected," said Laverne Lucas, a Lexington resident. "I had no idea what to expect. I'm a basketball fan."

The Blue team blasted its way to a 5-0 lead after the first of three 20-minute periods.

Frank Gdovka, who plays right wing, scored the first three goals of the evening to obtain a hat trick. The hat trick was named earlier in the century by fans who used to throw their hats onto the ice to reward a players' three-goal achievement.

At 15:09 of the second period, the Blue team was assessed two minor penalties (two minutes for each minor penalty), which gave the White team a 5-3 man advantage on their power play. A power play is the term used for a man advantage given to one team after a penalty against the other. Power plays end after a goal is scored by the advantaged team.

The White team responded with two goals on their double-man advantage.

The Blue team, however, answered with two goals later in the period to make the score 7-2. Club president and captain Mark Shupe scored to make it 6-2 and right wing Dan Crocker accounted for the seventh goal with a shot that went between the goalie's legs.

The third period followed the shoot-out-in-the-OK-Corral tradition as the Blue team scored five more goals and the White added two to make the final 12-4 in favor of the Blue.

According to Shupe, the Cool Cats, who have UK club status, will catch on with the city.

Blackmon, Bennett return after injuries

UK basketball players Winston Bennett and James Blackmon rejoined the team yesterday and worked out in practice.

Bennett, who underwent arthroscopic knee surgery to remove a cartilage fragment, is expected to be full strength, according to Coach Joe B. Hall.

Blackmon, who missed last week's practices because of a calcium deposit that burst on his knee, is questionable, Hall said, but the doctors gave him the go-ahead sign to begin conditioning.

Decision on closing pretrial hearings is battle for freedom

A Fayette Circuit Court judge is expected to make a decision this week on a basic question of freedom.

The judge will decide whether the public and press will be allowed to attend the pretrial hearings of Elzie Alexander Morton. Morton is charged with the June 9 murder of Lin-jung Chen, a UK chemistry graduate student.

As the judge makes his decision, he will have some important considerations to keep in mind.

The first is the public's right to know. Closed hearings allow judicial proceedings to take place under cover, thus impeding the flow of information to the public.

Any government proceeding, such as a trial or hearing, must be open. The actions of government, such as the dispensation of justice, must be available for public scrutiny.

The second consideration is Morton's right to a fair trial. He is innocent until proven guilty. If press coverage of the pretrial hearings is biased to the point of impeding justice, then the press should not be allowed to cover the hearings. The judge must determine whether the press coverage would impede justice.

So far, press coverage has not been prejudicial. Throughout the progression of the case, the facts of the case have been reported conscientiously and correctly. There was not an undue amount of coverage, nor was there unfair coverage.

It seems obvious that Morton will receive a fair trial. It also seems obvious that the public should know about the trial. Therefore, it seems obvious that the hearings should be open.

But obvious things can never be taken for granted when they regard freedom and justice. Unfortunately, however, they usually are. Because America is such an open society, Americans tend to take their freedom for granted.

The Constitution guarantees that all citizens have basic freedoms, such as freedom of speech, religion and association. This basic guarantee has become such an integral part of American life that people often forget the precious nature of freedom.

And people also forget that their freedom is tenuous. Americans have fought and died in defense of freedom. Fortunately, the battle for freedom has been won in this country.

So far, but the battle goes on every day. When Fayette Circuit Court Judge Armand Angelucci makes his decision about whether to close the trial, Lexington will get to see an outcome to another skirmish in that battle.

May the best side win. Always

Can the actions of government be closed to the public?

Reagan re-election comes as no surprise

Boom boom. Out go the lights.

James A. STOLL

On election eve I was thinking about my old friend Ben Campney... thinking about that melancholy election eve four years ago.

At least back then we had a chance.

I remember standing in line to vote for Carter on a cool Iowa night, having uncharacteristically gone to the trouble of arranging my Kentucky absentee ballot. But when I finally got back to the dorm, Carter had already conceded the race.

Ben was defeated but not depressed. "Wait 'till '84," he told me with sincere determination.

"Fritz Without Grits," he said. Whatever I felt, it was not that I had wasted my time. Voting was as important as winning. Ben never let me forget that.

Ben wasn't around last Tuesday.

If somebody had told me, five years ago, that Ronald Reagan would be celebrating his second overwhelming victory this month, I would have laughed it off. If I had known then that Reagan would win two elections — actually serve two terms — I think my life would have been dramatically changed.

But I didn't know. And discovering it now — especially after all that pre-election foreshadowing — it doesn't seem to affect me as much. In fact, it seems much more honest to be a pacifist hippie liberal when it is not in fashion.

I still don't trust Reagan. Heck, I didn't really trust Mondale, but at least I didn't fear him.

Yet somehow Reagan has kept his thumb off the button for nearly a full term as our president. And despite some frivolous military campaigns, Reagan has not embroiled the United States into a mess that he could not escape from.

Including the 1984 presidential election.

Whether it is the economy, increasing nationalism or that great number of Americans who seem to trust this man, I am no longer afraid of Reagan. Even though he can be overly aggressive, this flaw is born of his strength and indomitable spirit. And despite my fervent opposition to many of Reagan's domestic cuts and defense increases, I am well aware that my own opportunities have improved under his administration.

Don't get me wrong. I know my new opportunities are at the expense of those less fortunate. But I am forced to acknowledge two very important facts before I condemn the American public for their decision.

First, if the position of President of the United States is meant to carry more than a name, Reagan is the better man for the job. Second, the power of the American people to make a choice is far more important than any choice they make.

I hoped that Ben was able to console himself that way last Tuesday night... the last I heard he was the top dog for the Mondale campaign in Iowa.

There was a time on election eve when it looked like Reagan might take Minnesota — and Mondale Iowa — and I know Ben would have loved preventing the 50-state sweep with the good of Hawkeye state. But, as we all know, it went pretty much as the pollsters predicted.

I wonder if Ben thought we had a chance.

Stranded motorist saved by UK student

The Good Samaritan lives! Recently I was traveling home from Indianapolis on I-64 when I thought I heard a gunshot. In actuality, my back tire had blown out.

After pulling over, I started going through the motion of opening my trunk and trying to find the right bolts by the intermittent light that would appear as a car passed by.

I got the car partially jacked up when I felt myself beginning to crumble. I guess I've seen too many editions of "60 Minutes" about the lunatic serial murderers stalking the highways — looking for women stranded on the highways or drunk drivers coasting off the side of the road and never knowing what hit them. I became truly terrified as trucks came barreling by two feet away while I tried to jack up the car.

I was too far away from the next exit to try to walk and was hesitant to give up the relative safety of my car if I started walking alone up the highway. I also knew I couldn't change the tire by myself. I didn't have the strength to get the lug nuts off. I tried to wave down a trucker, hoping they would notify the state police or pull off at the next exit and get some help for me at a filling station.

But, of course, who's going to pull over at night in the middle of nowhere? I know I wouldn't. I saw a car in the "in-control-together-kind-of-woman" and "sobbing mess" for at least an hour before my arm waving in the path of headlights prompted someone to head over and help.

I had no idea what kind of person was in that car and I was frightened to approach to tell what I needed. I thought it would be safest to go to the passenger side, out of arm's grasp. Behold — a "clean-cut all-American guy." So far so good. I asked him to go to the next exit and make a call for me, but he said he'd be glad to change the tire for me. As we started talking while he worked on the tire, I found out he was a UK student on his way back from Louisville. In fact, he was the one to introduce himself. I didn't have the presence of mind to ask who he was. Frank McClure was his name. He's a junior and a member of Phi Kappa Tau. I'm grateful he was willing to pull over and help. I'd rather not surmise what could have happened if he'd been like the hundreds of other drivers who felt it would be safer not to stop.

I tried to give Frank money, but he wouldn't take it. All I can do is say, "Thanks, Frank. I'm glad there are folks around like you."

This guest opinion was submitted by Cynthia D. Cantoni, a UK alumna and formerly an editor of the Kentuckyan yearbook.

Mondale stood for American 'equality'

When I cast my vote in the presidential election on Nov. 6, I did so in the only way I could possibly see as fit. I voted for Walter Mondale.

Granted, Mondale is not the most charismatic man in the world, but what we need now is not someone with an outstanding personality, but someone who stands for a basic American tenet which is on the verge of being forgotten: equality for all within our system of government.

Judging from President Reagan's overwhelming victory over Mondale, then, I became truly terrified as trucks came barreling by two feet ing of what America really stands for.

Guest OPINION

When the president states that he wants to preserve for future generations the right to take part in the "American Dream," he is engaging in typical campaign rhetoric. His administration has assisted in making the "American Dream" just that, a dream.

Exorbitant defense spending is taking away from vital social programs and constantly widening the gap between the rich and the poor. Through the Reagan administration's legitimization of class dominance, those at the bottom of the social, economic and political ladder find it increasingly difficult to climb up, while the wealthy and powerful become more and more firmly entrenched at the top.

College campuses, which were once the hub of idealism and liberalism, now seem to be weighted down with selfishness and closed-mindedness. College students say they back Reagan because he has improved the economy and they are concerned about being successful in the future.

Perhaps they don't realize that their "success" will come at the expense of the people whose Medicaid, Medicare, food stamps and welfare benefits have been cut and will be cut more in the future. A vote for Ronald Reagan shows either a callousness toward the underpriviledged or an ignorance of the true issues of the campaign. Turning one's back on the poor to attain a self-centered financial goal hardly seems proper for people living in a so-called democracy.

I only hope that in the next election in which the positions of the two sides differ so sharply, the voters will examine their own values more closely. A presidential election should be decided neither by party affiliation nor by a personality contest.

The most important thing in voting is selecting the candidate who will do what is in the best interest of all the people — not just a select few.

This guest opinion was submitted by Tim Curtis, a recreation junior.
