UK LIBRARY SYSTEM

The following is the fifth part of a special nine part series drawn from Mary Ruth Brown's article in The Encyclopedia of Library and Information Science.

Units of the System, Including Collections & Services:
King Library

The main King Library complex serves the social sciences and humanities; the university community's general information needs; and the specialized needs in the areas of documents, rare books, university archives, manuscripts, and other special collections. Fund accounting, technical processing, interlibrary loans, and personnel procedures are centralized for all branch libraries and are located in King Library.

Technical service departments are automated using the Online Computer Library Center (OCLC) systems through the Southeastern Library Network (SOLINET). In 1978 the total system joined the Medical and Law Libraries in the use of the Library of Congress Classification system. Gradually the most used monographic and serial titles are being reclassified from the Dewey to the Library of Congress system.

Reference is the largest department in terms of professional staff. General reference services include reference information and referral and on-line computerized literature searching. The reference department's instructional services section provides basic library instruction to most freshmen entering the university and advanced instruction to specific groups or classes as requested. Unusual activities of this department include its service as a campus clearinghouse for academic information.

Two spring 1979 surveys, one of faculty and one of students, resulted in the merger of the Newspaper-Microtext Department with a centralized periodical room. This move created a new periodical-microform area extending from the main lobby on the second floor of King South, across the bridge, and into nearly three-fourths of the second floor of King North. This arrangement brought together, for the first time, all forms of periodical and newspaper material in the library.

Special Collections and Archives, the second largest department (again in terms of professional staff), resembles a branch library more than a department in both its collection and mode of operation. Major areas of this department's resources include Kentuckiana, history of printing and typography, university archives, 18th and 19th century English and American literature, modern political history, photographic archives, oral history-audiovisual archives, and Appalachian Studies.

The King Library Press in the Department of Special Collections and Archives was established by university librarians in 1956. A handpress operation, it is neither a private press reflecting the tastes and opinions of an individual nor a commercial press dependent upon sales for its support. Its functions are to produce handcrafted editions of significant texts and to provide instruction in book production and related arts to the university community and to residents of the Commonwealth.

The Kentucky Library Association's Annual Conference will be held at Paducah's Executive Inn Riverfront, October 9-11, 1985. The theme for the conference is "Libraries/Librarians Unlimited!" Program topics include librarians' legal rights, left brain/right brain activities, magazines for children and young adults, marketing your library to the private donor, and the effective influencing of library legislation. Special events include a tour of Paducah's Market House Museum, with a wine and cheese reception in the Art Gallery; an Oktoberfest Celebration featuring German food and a German band; and a Western Kentucky style barbeque luncheon on Friday.

For more information contact:

Jennie S. Boyarski, Program Chair
P.O. Box 7380
Paducah, KY 42002-7380

Note to company representatives and librarians: Tom Sutherland is coordinating an Exhibitors/Librarians Golf Tourney scheduled for Wednesday morning, October 9.

Call for Mini-Session Topics and Presenters

As part of the KLA Fall 1985 Conference Program, KLA members will be given an opportunity to present mini sessions. The program would be presented to approximately 16-20 persons in 30-45 minute sessions. The format is such that the presentation is informal and conversational. Since visual aids are frequently used, this type of programming sometimes is called a "poster talk." If you or someone you know has a special project/program or success story to tell, see Rob Aken for an application form.
