Steinem encourages young feminists

The younger generation of femi-nists should do "anything it wants" in the push for social equality, not-ed feminist and author Gloria Steinem said yesterday during an ap pearance at a Lexington book store.

Several UK students attended the book signing. Beckie Overstreet, a biology sophomore, said she skipped class to catch a glimpse of Steinem, who was a pivotal figure in the women's liberation movement of the 1970s.

Overstreet said she recently read "Revolution from Within" and found the book to be inspirational. "It makes me feel stronger as a woman, as a person. I have more confidence now, much more confi-

Jami Beavers, an English senior, said she has not read Steinem's book yet, but has read some of her other works.

"I think she's made great strides for women and our movement," Beavers said. "She's been able to knock down a lot of barriers."

Laura Turmer, an anthropology graduate student, said Steinem seems to be able to speak to a lot of different audiences."

Turner said she did not want to identify herself as a feminist, but still is extremely concerned about women's issues.

Auroad Services.

The service, provided by the Office of International Affairs, offers students the opportunity to travel overseas, earn credit hours, study various subjects, tour cities and build resumes.

Why study abroad?

Many students do it because they
"feel the need to broaden their horizons," said Study Abroad Adviser Suzanne Kifer, "Once they start, they find it difficult to stay home. It gives them a chance to learn about

Traveling costs vary depending on the program the student chooses. However, scholarships can help deter the cost, and almost all scholarships given by the University can be used to support overseas studies.

For those who would rather sit through three showings of "Ishtar" than watch an opera, "Falstaff," presented by the School of Missic and Department of Theatre, is the perfect performance to see. Though more than two hours long, the live price from Decoming boring.

The opera as a whole was a test of talents and endurance for the fa-culty, students and Lexington com-munity singers involved in the pro-duction. UR opera director and orchestra conductor Phillip Miller noced that "Falstaff" is "one of the biggest orchestral operas ever writ-ten."

Dan Cook, the Lexington community singer and opera veteran who plays Sir John Falstaff, acknowledged that his role is "an endurance test and a test of skills."

Cook played Falstaff 20 years ago, and despite the difficulty of the role, jumped at the chance to perform the part again.

"Falstaff is the supreme comic haritone role," the explained.

The UK orchestra also had their work cut out for them. Stewart Smith, a trumpet player and UK graduate student, spoke on the difficulty of practicing a piece one way, then having to play it differently during performances in order to follow the actors.

Monica Lykins, a cello player and music performance major, spoke about the dedication it took to endure the three-hour practices that took up the musicians' weekends and weekdays.

The result is a feast for both the eyes and ears. The authentic set and orgeous and bright costumes make

Highlights of the opera include Lauren Robbins as Mr. Ford, with his powerful and emotionally charged solo concerning his wife's supposed infidelity. Wildcats demolish Tigers by 38 points

Senior Stataf Writer

Almost nothing unexpected happened at Rupp Arena last night, except maybe the margin of victory. Which is to say that No. 4-ranked UK went on one of its inevitable scoring streaks to wrap up another Southeast-ern Conference victory, this time long before the end of the first half.

Louisiana State stayed competitive for almost 13 min MASHBURN utes before the Wildcats went on a maddening 21-6 run en route to a huge 52-24 half-time lead and an eventual 105-67 victory before 24,225 fans. Sophomore center Andre Riddick was the first to incite the irascible UK crowd to a near riot with a rebound put-back at the 5:40 mark. Star forward Jamal Mashburn, on his way to 16 first half points and 27 for the game, scored the next bucket off a deft high-low pass from freshman Jared Prickett.

Appointment of Hillary to be health reform czar reeks of cheap nepotism

EDITORIAL

In response to John F. Kennedy's appointment of his brother Robert Kennedy as attorney general, some disgrantled congressmen decided to enact an anti-nepotism law. This law would prevent the president from including family members in his cabinet.

Today, Congress has been shot in the foot

by their own law.
President Clinton and his wife, Hillary, President Cinton and nis wire, fillary, have gotten around that law by giving her a job without pay. The job she has been given just happens to be shaping one of the key issues people elected the president to change—health care.

Because she is not receiving monetary

H. CLINTON

Because she is not receiving monetary compensation for her job of creating a new national health care policy, she answers to no one except her husband. Congress cannot even touch her because of her relationship to the president. Hillary has not been confirmed by Congress, unlike persons working in the White House with less power than her. She also has received her own office in the west wing which is a security-tight country gives her even more power — only this power is not government approved.

Congress once again has made a law that came back to haunt them. The law should be repealed and replaced with one that allows them the ability to check all presidential appointments and while at the same time getting rid of the vengeful nepotism rule. It would complete the system of checks and balance our forefathers created. Hillary should either be confirmed by Congress or get out of the west wing. The nation didn't elect Hillary Clinton president. It elected her husband.

Welcome change visible in White House attitude toward pro-choice issues

EDITORIAL

In one of his first acts of office, President Clinton issued an executive order last week which reversed pro-life policies practiced by former presidents Ronald Reagan and George Bush.

The move was a victory for abortion rights activists whose right to choose to have an abortion has been held hostage by 12 years of Republican control of the White House to choose to have an abortion has been held hostage by 12 years of Republican control of the White House.

Clinton, as he promised during his campaign for office, is once again providing women with the reproductive freedom to which they are entitled. It is indeed refreshing to see such an open-minded view coming from the White House.

The president also issued an order allowing the RU486 pill, the equivalent of an oral abortion pill, to be brought into the country for research purposes. While the pill cannot be administered, Clinton's permission to conduct research means the pill may someday available for general consumption, pending Federal Drug Administration approval. The pill is already available in many countries in Europe.

In the sweep of changes Clinton also repealed the ban on the use of valuable fetal tissue which can be used for a wide variety of medical procedures and treatments.

His repeal of the aga rule on counseling patients that abortion is an option in federally funded clinics also was lifted. At last, once again, abortion is a choice for women in our country.

Are Commandments vital to our survival?

Some believe they should be taught in school

Laught in school

I watched a delightful television show the other day. Perhaps you've seen it. It consists of religious broadcaster Par Robertson as the host and contains a series of heart-wenching stories designed to make you turn to religion.

If you're watching it because you have some huge void in your life and you find what you're missing in Robertson, so be it, that's great. But if you're watching it because it was either Robertson, an in-depth analysis of football or fly-fishing, you see something a little different.

Robertson told me (Yes, he spoke to me through the television screen. He kind of has that way of looking at you.) that the United States is heading for a huge melt-down of sorts. He said we have become so immoral and so without values of any kind that we are about to step nect-deep into anarchy.

Robertson went on to tell me

Robertson went on to tell me that this is what happened to Germany and France and all other countries who at one point or another have forsaken religion (Nazis, French Revolution, etc.) and then he suggested that we begin to teach the Ten Commandments in school again. No, I'm sorry, he complained that we can't teach the Ten Commandments in school. One v. Let's start at Command.

Thou shalt not take the Lord's nam

Thou shalt not take the Lord's name in vain. That would be good. People would have to be more creative in speaking and writing. No. 4 is about keeping the Sabbath day holy. That's iffy.

No. 5, thou shalt honor thy father and thy mother. Definitely a good idea. Mom and Dad are going to love you no matter what. They deserve some credit. Thou shalt not kill. No need to explain that. Perhaps if Charles Manson, or Ted Bundy, or whoever killed former president John F. Kennedy had heard that in school they might not have done what they did.

Don't commit adultery. That would eliminate all those annoying little car alarms that go off when you breathe on them. Don't lie. That one could possibly stifle creativity among students, but I won't argue that it's not a good idea.

And don't covet. Covet? Oh, students, but I won't argue that it's not a good idea.

And don't covet. Covet? Oh, don't want what you don't have. Jealousy is innately human, we simply can't help it, but it's still a good goal.

ply can't help it, but it's still a good goal.

All of these embody good social values. I can see how Robertson would want these to be taught in the schools. It's the other two commandments, Thou shalt have no other Gods before me, and thou shalt not make for yourself a carved image. What happens to the people who aren't Judeo-Christian?

Lappreciate his idea for an insta-cure for society, but we really don't need it as badly as he thinks we do. I personally think that we've got a few more (thousand or three) good years in us, and we'll get on fine without him.

Doesn't that leave them out?
Robertson started on all this because he thinks religion could dig society out of this supposed rut we're in. What I want to know is are we in a rut, or is this just the way we've always been? Society marches on. Technology has made us grow apart from each other. Maybe crime has gotten worse, but that's the price we pay for what we've got.

that's the price we pay for what we've got.

Haven't you ever noticed that when something happens to you, you immediately notice when it happens to other people even when you wouldn't have cared before? For instance, when a psycho sends you weird e-mail and a post-apocalyptic comic book, you pert up when you hear about it happening to someone else. All of a sudden you feel connected to David Cetterman and anyone else who has been stalked or over-zealously pursued.

has been stalked or over-zealously pursued.

Maybe America has just been over-trun with greed and sensation-alistic journalism. We think we're having more than our usual altorment of serial killers when we probably wouldn't have noticed all that's happening without excellent coverage of the Jeffrey Dahmer case including comic books and several appearances by victims' families on various talk-shows.

big deal about first lady Hillary Clinton being given the appoint-ment as head of the new Health Task Force that she deserves if Kennedy hadn't appointed his brother to the attorney general's position when he wasn't really qualified. Actually, when it comes down to it, Hillary Clinton is pretty qualified for the attorney general position and probably would have been considered for it in the future if her husband hadn't been

So I'd just like to thank Robertson for telling me that the world is going to end tomorrow. Society's no worse than it was in biblical times when a king could order every male child under the age of two killed for his own protection. Actually, it's a little better. We just have to learn to take things

Those of us who are majoring in the social sciences often find our selves viewed as slow of wil, lacking in "common sense" or hope-lessly naive about the world and its workings. Unable to stand the rigors of the "true" academic fields, like the natural sciences, we poor social science majors are indeed the pathetic stepchildren of the academic community.

I must admit that in my own case these contentions are completely accurate. For example, math has always been impossible for me to grasp, as any number higher than 10 causes the frontal lobe of my brain to perceptibly spasm, and I lapse into "thinkers cramp". Long ago I decided that I shall forever function utilizing a numerical system in which everything can be counted as either "one" or "more than one." This decision, you see, has saved me from countless headaches caused by mental overexertion.

I should also wish to thank my professors for making certain allowances in my case and always reminding themselves of my major when I prove unable to balance a chemical equation or construct a well-reasoned research paper.

Parking structure No. 2, located on Rose Street, will undergo renovation over the next several weeks, requiring traffic through the building to be rerouted, UK design and construction officials said yesterday.
Construction also may make it necessary to close the entire structure for short periods of time after 8 a.m. on those days. Employees who use the structure

Throughout the renovation process, Parking and Training Services personnel will be on hand to direct traffic flow when necessary.

UK has about 100 parking areas, not all of which honor hangtags for parking structure No. 2. Parking structure No. 2 is restricted to employees.
