Trustees to Consider Tripartite Report

President Otis Singletary opened the door for increased student representation in the Uni-versity Senate yesterday by pro-posing that the Board of Trustees adopt the recommendations of the Senate Ad Hoc Tripartite Com-

Singletary made the recommendation at the Board's monthly meeting in the Patterson Office Tower. If the Tripartite Committee report is adopted, faculty membership in the Senate would be reduced from 200 to 160 seats, while student representation would jump from 5 to 40 seats. The University Senate approved the measure December 14 by a vote of 100 to 59.

The board delayed action on the proposal until its February 16 meeting in order to give the trustees time to consider it.

Further Student Motions
An unexpected move for further student voice in University affairs was made by a Louisville junior, Michael Campbell, who called for the trustees to "institute a process by which student-initiated motions can appear on the agenda of board meetings."

The committee, to be chaired by Dr. William Bryan, director of student services for the college of nursing, is designed to identify the "major successes, problems, needs, and trends" of student residential life. Democrat Boggs Wins House Leadership WASHINCTON (AP)—Democrats Tuesday elected Rep. Hale Boggs of Louisiana, a moderate long active in national politics, to be House majority leader in the new Congress.

"The council has pointed out to me that the project could endanger the unique wildlife of the area and destroy this region of unusual and unique natural beauty," Nixon said.

Money for the 107-mile-long canal was authorized by Congress in 1962. Nixon said the canal's total cost, if completed, would be about $180 million.

The purpose of the canal, Nixon noted, was to reduce transportation costs for barge shipping. He added that it was designed at a time when the focus of federal concern in such matters was still almost completely on maximizing economic return. He said a natural treasure was involved in the case of the canal, the Oklawaha River, which he said would be destroyed by the construction.

Hatfield Calls for Congressional Reform

Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Oregon, attacked last night what he called a "powerless" and outmoded" congressional seniority system, and then proposed reforms and reconciliation measures to bind the wounds of "the progressively more dehumanizing nation that we are."

Speaking at the 88th Annual Banquet of the Lexington Chamber of Commerce, Hatfield suggested measures to limit congressmen's terms of office and reduce the power of committee chairmen.

He said that a constitutional amendment could be passed which would limit Senate and House terms to 12 years combined—up to two terms in the Senate and six in the House. While noting that the average

"In our shift in the past few decades from a rural to an urban nation, we have begun to look to Washington as the oracle of truth in a troubled age," he said. "And yet, Washington itself is beset with a vast number of problems that it seems almost powerless to change."

Hatfield claimed that the current calm in the Senate only masks deep divisions between opposing factions.

"We need reconciliation -- need it badly," he said. "But until we realize that we as Americans possess inalienable rights... and recognize the relevance of the fe of one man to another, we will remain the progressively more dehumanizing nation that we are," he said.

Ky Village Phase-Out: End of a Political Playground

phase-out and closing of Kentucky Village, the so-called "treatment center" for juvenile delinquents just outside Lexington, should be welcomed as an overdue end to a decaying and overcrowded institution However, the announcement must also be recognized as the easy escape that it is for the political leaders who have played around with the lives of youth with problems and to no surprise, have only created more problems.

George Perkins, state commissioner of child welfare, made the announcement after a Fayette grand jury said they would investigate alleged recent beatings of juveniles at KV. He explained that the decision had been in the planning for two and one-half years and the phase-out program, which will last another two years, rationalizes to the grand jury why no additional improvements are being made

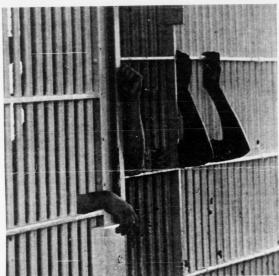

What the grand jury should understand however, is that the "corrections" system of Kentucky only parallels the racist and corrupt prison system of the nation at large.

Perkins' statement about the long planning necessary to close KV con-

The recent announcement of the flicts with what a representative told a Kernel reporter last Spring. Then plans were supposedly in the making for KV to be reconstructed into several smaller, more efficient centers, rather than the larger, crowded institution which it has always been.

At that time, there was a freeze on funds at KV and evidently the 'freeze" has frozen permanently. Once again, juvenile rehabilitation remains at the bottom of political priorities.

Of course, this is not to say that Governor Nunn himself has not been concerned with the conditions at KV. He demonstrated that in 1968 when he made a surprise visit, (probably made a wrong turn somewhere), and was upset by the "deplorable" conditions. In a radical move to prove he wasn't just going to talk about the issue, he immediately outlawed cigarette smoking and ordered compulsory church attendance for the inmates. Jesus Christ Superstar.

The questions now lies with the future. What will happen to the youth who remain at the deteriorating KV during the two year phase-out program. "Plans" call for no additional improvements.

Furthermore, one must ask if any type of lesson has been learned from the 73-year-old political playground called Kentucky Village. The grand jury or at least someone outside the state welfare department's office should critically investigate and study the history of KV before all of the evidence is destroyed. It would be stupid to tear down the cells while politicians participate in ground breaking ceremonies for another prison.

John Junot

Inside Eastern State Hospital "One Becomes a Non-Person"

EDITOR'S NOTE: John Junot is a senior

First, people, let me tell you the good aspects of Eastern State Hospital, lest I be accused of unfair prejudices. A lot of people really need deserve to be here: alcoholics, incompetents, seniles, retardates, and drug abusers-real drug abusers. For those, this place does real good. They rest, recuperate, and reexamine their lives. They heal.

The personnel-doctors, but mainly The personnel-doctors, but mainly nurses and aides, are overworked and underpaid, but frequently display courageous dedication and seem to get satisfaction in their jobs. Many of them are also, I might add, undereducated for the demands of their job. Many times they just plain don't realize the effect of their actions on their charges. But, in genactions on their charges. But, in general, more good is done than harm. The place is clean, the food is good.

Now for the bad part.

As of now I have been locked up on this ward (MS-2) for ten days. This is on a "seven-day" commitment, and there is at least one day to run on it. You see, I spent one day "in custody" in the County Jail waiting to be packaged and shipped out here, and the doctors do not work weekends. When the doctors the pack this place officially ceases tors are gone, this place officially ceases to exist. I was committed Thursday, the 7th of January.

The first five days of this "commitment" I was held, in effect, incommunicado. Letters I sent out, I have learned, did not reach their destination. I was allowed one phone call—but only to a parent. I was massively disoriented.

You see, I had no idea that I was coming here or that my sanity was in question. I woke up that Thursday expecting a rather normal day. I went to the Student Center to eat and read, where I received a phone call from my lawyer, and old friend, Bill Allison.

Bill told me he had arranged for a last minute hearing to have Hatcher's testimony suppressed as entrapment. He told me to come over to his house/office for a briefing. I did. We talked for ahour and then went to the hearing. Bill made a flurry of motions; I could only generally follow the action, since this was a strange situation to me and I am not a lawyer. The judge, N. Mitchell Meade, took no actions on his motions; the prosecution attorney — Mulloy, I believe, answered the motions with a number of objections.

Suddenly the prosecutor made the mo-tion. He challenged my legal competency and moved to, literally, have my head examined. Quickly concurring, Tony Todd, lawyer for other defendants in my case made a similar motion. Judge Meade stated that Detective Hatcher (Hatcher was also in the room at the time) had talked to him earlier and was inclined to grant the mo-

Point of information: "legal competency" is defined, roughly, as a person's ability to follow the proceedings of a hearing or trial, and advise, and be advised by his lawyer so as to make the best possible defense. I was at that very moment following the hearing and bridge my lawyer, literally right under very moment following the hearing and advising my lawyer, literally right under Judge Meade's nose. There should have been little doubt about my legal competency, and this letter should serve to remove even that.

And yet, I was never asked or permitted to ask any questions, or make an objection. I was summarily slapped into jail, and everything that has happened to me since has been done sum-

I was under the impression at that time that I was to spend, at most, a couple of hours in jail, then be examined by two psychiatrists who would verify my legal competency and then be released. So did Bill. I did, indeed, talk in the property of the prop to one psychiatrist-a Dr. Jordan, a second not being available-who talked to me about 30 seconds and asked, "Why would anyone question your legal competency?" That was about 4:30.

About 8:30 I did get to talk to Bill About 8:30 I do get to Link to Bin again. He had no more idea than I about what was going on. He told me I was to be committed for seven days. It seemed somewhat funny then, and we talked and joked for a half hour, maybe to relieve the tension and fear we were both beginning to feel.

I was taken to Eastern State Hospital bout 2:30 Friday the 15th. I have rotted here ever since.

Being committed, one becomes Being committed, one becomes a non-person. You are stripped utterly and absolutely of all the basic civil rights. You are thrown in with complete strang-ers, in an environment you have been taught to fear. No bond, no charges, not even, technically, an arrest. No abil-ity to gain information. No knowledge of your position vis-a-vis the law or in-stitutional rules. No communications in or out at first allowed. No ability to con-duct important outside business.

Over a week has been cut out of my life, the way a butcher slices a hog's carcass. And a very important week, as you all know. It will take me two years, I estimate, to repair the damage made by my inability to register and sign for a school loan—my only expected source of income for several months. I tried to get permission to make phone calls from doctors who looked right through me, nurses and aides who "tsked-tsked" and double-talked me out of existence.

You are presumed sick until proven well; presumed guilty until shown in-nocent. Because I have three trumped-up drug charges against me, it has been a battle to tear apart that cardboard-cutout stereotype of a junkie, as the staff insists on seeing me.

I have no company or intellectual companionship. Two senile and maniacal patients scream and shout all day, two more are but constantly annoying children. Others are surly, hostile, overbearing. The noise is more or less constant, and there is little privacy. All this, for ten straight days or more, locked up, with no outside exercise and little to occupy the mind—especially a highly intelligent one; locked up in a ward maybe a hundred feet long, two dozen or so people pacing back and forth, back and forth, past the same doors, the same rooms, the same rooms, the same rooms, the same faces and voices.

Only one thing keeps the place even

Only one thing keeps the place even as calm as it is. Thorazine. It's a dumbing, sleep-inducing drug, doled out in four hour intervals, from around 7:30 in the morning to 8:00 at night. It diin the morning to 8:00 at mignt. It or minishes your spirit, bringing a mean-ingless peace. It is a miracle I can even write this coherently under its effect. Doses range from 50 to 100 milli-grams and even higher.

I get angry often at all this. Luckily, I get angry often at all this. Luckily, I have disciplined my mind enough to hide it, control it, focus it like a gas explosion into a hot blue flame. And yet it is not so much the hospital; it is the system of things that makes it the way it is, so banal, so bureaucratic, so full, and so necessary. That gaping wound in constitutional law that I have been pushed through, falling like Alice down the rabbit hole to a mad world.

I fight and I resist, using my flame to cut and melt artistically. I feel I might have educated some here, bringing fresh ideas to some aged minds, knocking some of teh staff from their old com-

You too, I say, must resist. I have said before, "Where there is no justice, there must be revenge." There is no justice in the way I have been treated. Never has anything so low, so rotten, so disgusting and immoral been practiced against me. Let me be an example of the "justice" one may expect in the Lexington courts. I say, be ready to wreak revenge. I leave the rest to your own minds!

Yet even with this sense of technical equality, the life of a Russian woman probably would not be pleasant for her American counterpart. There are two female classes in Russia, separated by their generations. Older women, of the generation which survived WW II, are Russia's menial laborers, sweeping streets and shovelling snow, ing streets and shovelling snow, digging ditches and carrying heavy loads.

On collective farms they are seen behind horses and oxen plowing fields or watching cows, one old woman per animal. In the cities they are elevator operators and building painters. Any job done by an unskilled poor black in America is done in Russia by a "babushka," a grandmother. Yet in the Soviet Union these women are comparatively well paid and, just as important there, are given priority in housing.

Product Of System
The modern Soviet woman, born since the Second World War,
is a product of the Soviet system.
She is not used to the heavy work of her mother and grandmother and has higher aspirations. She is as well educated as a man and takes job equality for granted. Women are teachers, decture seconomists, and comdoctors, economists, and computer programmers in more than token numbers.

token numbers.
Yet Just as American women desire the Job equality of Russian women, Russians are now seeking femininty. Young Russian women want to know about Western fashions and cosmetics. They want to buy stockings and perfumes from foreigners. Young Russians, while proud of their jobs and education, feel that somewhere since the Revolution they have lost the qualities of they have lost the qualities of femininity which exist in the West.

Demands Incorporated

Demands Incorporated
In the fervor of the experimental times after the Bolshevik Revolution in 1917, most of the current demands of the American women's liberation movement were incorporated into Russian law. Abortions were free and available on request. At one period in Moscow, during the 1930's, abortions exceeded live
births. births

Divorces were made more difficult to obtain and wedding proceedings have acquired some pomp so that they now approach the style of the Las Vegas wedding chapels. There is a taperecorded weedding march and a three - minute ceremony in a specially constructed weedding palace in every city. As one couple exits through the back door the next couple comes in the front. The state does not recognize church weeddings and the church does not recognize state weeddings.

Greatest Advances

Greatest Advances

Greatest Advances

Russian women have made their greatest advances in job security and job equality. Women are given two months leave with full pay prior to giving birth and two months leave with full pay after giving birth. Their job remains secure for a year.

Day care centers called "creches" are available but it is the usual practice for the mother to care for her child until he is three years old. In many families, with the severe housing shortage throughout the Soviet Union, grandparents live in the same apartment and care for the children.

With the intertwining of the

With the intertwining of the With the intertwining of the political and economic systems in Soviet Union, job equality has led many women into politics. Cities are governed by City So-viets, similar to City Councils but viets, similar much larger.

On the surface the Soviet Union is the American women's liberator's dream. Yet even in this society which has brought equal-ity between the sexes almost to its biological limit there are complaints

What these and other young Russian women long for is some amount of gentility. Where women work side by side with men, in laboratories and on construc-tion projects, male deference is

Some Acts Patronizing

While American feminists consider acts such as men opening doors or carrying bundles for women patronizing, the majority of American women expect some special treatment. In Russia respect is not for sex, but for age. On the Moscow subway, young people offer their seats to older people.

people.

The egalitarian state of women in the Soviet Union is caused primarily by economic necessity. With the Revolution and Civil War, the purges of Stalin and World War II, Russia lost over 40 million people, the vast majority of them men.

After the Second World War the ratio between women and men in Leningrad was seven to one, forcing women to fill positions formerly occupied by men. Also, the Soviet Union relies more heavily on unskilled labor than the United States does, and older, unskilled women are the only people available to fill this need. There is one additional distinction between jobs occupied by women in the Soviet Union and in America. This distinction is symbolized by Valentina Nikolayeva Tereshkova, Chairman of the Soviet Women's Committee, Hero of the Soviet Union, and . . . pilot-cosmonaut of the USSR.

She flew to New York, electing to see a Dr. Goldfarb, who performed abortions in his office outside the city. She paid $200 and flew back that night.

Pam was one of approximate-ly 75 women who has received abortion information and coun-seling from the Women's Lib group in Lexington since it was started in September 1970. Her other alternatives in Lexington were limited. She could have contacted the Clergy Consulta-tion Service which operates fairly secretively through the Rev. Ed Miller of the United Comput Ministry.

Rev. Ed Miller of the United Campus Ministry.

The Clergy Consultation Ser-vice began several years before abortion became legal anywhere in the United States. It would refer to illegal sympathetic doc-tors or to doctors in foreign countries where abortion was legal.

(The legality of abortion counseling in a state where abortion is illegal is at question The Women's Liberation coun-selors feel, however, that if it is selors feel, nowever, tinat it is illegal, they are ready to test the law. They do not think such a law should apply, in any event, if they are referring women only to places where the procedure is legal.)

Dr. J. W. Roddick Jr., professor of obstetrics and gynecology at the UK medical school has said, "As long as we can fit a situation into the framework of the law, a therapeutic abortion to save the life of the mother, we think the girl should have it.

But we don't go overboard."

Threatened suicide has been the basis of many of the hospital's abortions which were interpreted as preserving the mother's life.

Meanwhile profiteers are rec-ognizing the need for referral agencies. Until more states drop agencies. Until more states drop residency requirements and the correspondingly strict laws, women have to have contacts to find a doctor willing and able to perform an abortion, whether in New York or elsewhere.

In New York City alone, 20 "private" referral agencies have private reterral agencies have spring up. Their usual pro-cedure is to rent a plush Man-hattan office, a secretary, and a college or gynecologist mailing list. They make deals with doc-tors, maybe rent their own clinic or hospital, and sit back. The phone begins to ring. They make $25 to $200 on each re-ferral. The doctors and the women pay for the service

On a visit to one such service, Manhattan Pregnancy Advisory Service (MPAS), an out-of-towner found very stylish blue and purple calling cards. The suite was panelled, carpeted, and in the inner office sat the manager. His name was Johen Stanley. He had an immaculate desk and appeared very pleased to see anyone

He proudly stated that his total price for referral and the operation was down to $280 now for pregnancies less than 12 weeks and $500 over 12

Mailing Lists MPAS did the routine with the college mailing lists. Now they were receiving calls from all over the States. There was a U.S. map with pins in it on the wall directly opposite the phone.
He said they referred patients to alliving and private boostitals.

He said they reterred patients to clinics and private hospitals. Stanley added, "If you can offer a doctor a lot of women, the price will come right down." MPAS says that it charges $10 for "administrative work involved."

Other organizations such as the Woman's Pavilion in New York have their own doctors and clinics. The price break-down for the Pavilion: $300 to physician, $350 for hospital and $100 to the Pavilion for "ad-ministrative overhead." They have a doorman.

This year, however, the Kittens have troubles. The team is probably better known for who it doesn't have than for who it has.

The team does not have Tom McMillan, the seven-foot southpaw superman UK tried so hard to land last spring. With McMillan, UK would have much better than its present 2-5 record. Without him, they are a team, with no depth and a "natural forward" playing in the pivot. "We just need more players," said Hall. As usually happens in col-lege basketball, the fans are con-cemed with the futures of the var-sity and forget about the first-year men who will play important roles in the next few seasons. Though this year's Kittens have only a 2-5 record, there have nave only a 2-5 record, there have been some outstanding perform-ers on the squad. Two of them are the unrelated Lyons boys - 5-foot-10 Ronnie and 6-foot-5 Wendell.

Wendell.

Ron from Maysville, Kentucky, started four years for his high school team, Mason County, and averaged 25 points per game. As captain in his senior year, Ronnie was the state's leading scorer with a 36-point average. With many college offers to pick from, Ron chose UK over Alabama and North Carolina.

Wendell was also a four-year starter and averaged 18 points a game over those four years. He selected UK over Western and Louisville.

Hall admitted. Drewitz is a good bet to take over Larry Steele's spot on the varsity next year. "We've been trying to change our offense to let him play some outside," Hall said, but Drewitz is still the closest thing to a center the freshmen have.

The two other scholarship players are Ray Edleman and Wendell Lyons, and both will make it with the varsity next season. make it with the varsity next season.

"Ray is a real varsity prospect and will see a lot of action next year," Hall said. The Pennsylvanian is averaging 20.9 points per game and is hitting 82.9 percent from the line.

Wendell Lyons' prospects are based more on the team's needs, according to Hall.

Ron, who is currently averag-
