STATE POLICE FIRED TEAR GAS canisters yesterday to break up a rock and bottle-throwing crowd of about 400 striking miners near a nonunion mine in western Kentucky, officials said.

Some strikers hurled canisters back as about 70 riot-equipped police moved in, said State Trooper Ron Thompson of the Henderson post.

Two Daviess County, Ky. sheriff's deputies, a state policeman and at least two other persons were hospitalized with injuries sustained in the melee.

YOUNG MEN ARE FINDING COLLEGE less attractive, according to a Census Bureau study released yesterday. The report suggested that fewer men are enrolling because they are not eligible for GI education benefits, no longer need draft deferments and because they consider a college education less important.

The proportion of 18- and 19-year-old men who have completed one year of college declined from 13.6 percent in 1970 to 10.9 percent this year, the report said.

However, during the same period, a higher proportion of women the same age completed the same education, increasing from 12.9 percent in 1970 to 10.9 percent this year, the report said.

A FARMER'S STRIKE scheduled to begin today will have widespread support among western Kentucky farmers, Kentucky leaders of a group called American Agriculture said yesterday.

Other farm leaders, however, said it is difficult to determine just how many Kentuckians will become involved in the effort.

American Agriculture, based in Springfield, Col., has called on all farmers in the nation to stop selling their crops and buying anything other than essentials to protest the current rate of farm prices.

The group plans to picket "until Congress gives the farmer 100 percent of parity and the farmers and the farmers elect a board to keep an eye on that parity thing in Washington," said Larry Smiley, a Mayfield farmer and group leader.

Parity prices are determined by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and represent the relationship between what a farmer gets for his crops and what he has to spend to produce them. In Kentucky, current prices for all farm products are below parity.

SUPPORT FOR A COLLEGE tuition tax credit faded yesterday as congressional leaders sought a final vote on Social Security legislation that would mean substantially higher payroll taxes in the next 10 years.

Enactment of the Social Security measure, aimed at providing new financial stability for the retirement system's trust funds, has been held up by a dispute over the proposed $200-per-student tuition tax credit.

Congressional leaders indicated yesterday that they were making progress in breaking the deadlock and clearing the way for a final vote on Social Security before Christmas.

THE CARTER ADMINISTRATION may have tried to accomplish too much too soon in its first year, but 1978 will be different, Vice President Walter F. Mondale said yesterday. Mondale predicted the administration's legislative initiatives next year would be "a string salvo, wisely scheduled."

Recombinant DNA research has been termed by some as "more hazardous than the atomic bomb," and it has also been praised as a benefit to mankind.

Recombinant DNA research is basically this: the genetic material of one organism is inserted into another organism, and the genetic materials combine. Thus, the term "recombinant."

Currently, only microorganisms are used, and the receiving organism is usually common bacteria, known as E. Coli, that live in the human digestive tract.

Dr. Robert C. Dickson is a biochemist at UK, and he argues in favor of recombinant work, as he is the person in charge of all recombinant work at the University.

"Here at UK, we've been looking for a gene found in milk that breaks down lactose into glucose and galactose. I am really interested in this as a model—all organisms turn genes on and off, and hopefully, through our experimentation here we can find out why," Dickson explained.

There are many practical aspects of this research, according to Dickson.

"The microorganism E. Coli could be used as a factory for enzymes and hormones in which some people are deficient. It could be used to improve antibiotics, or even to improve the photosynthetic apparatus of plants.

"Also, if the research progresses far enough, we could conceivably put nitrogen-fixing genes in all crops, thus eliminating the need for nitrogenous fertilizers," Dickson said.

But this sounds too good to be true to Dr. John J. Just, a professor in the biology department.

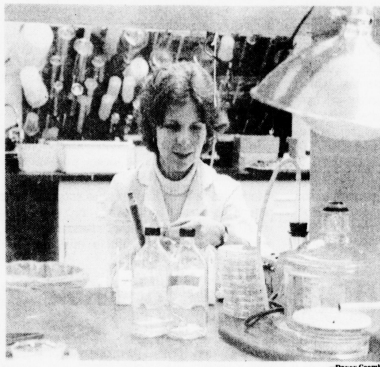

"These microorganisms (E. Coli) now make products of the foreign material—they create completely new organisms. You don't know what they will be; there is no good way of predicting that the new organism will just make the same product that the foreign DNA tells it to make.

"Thousands of strains are being made in a lab, and they don't know if they are producing dangerous new organisms. That's the problem," Just said.

Actually, according to Just, two problems exist. The first problem is evident above, where a researcher may unknowingly produce an organism that will produce a harmful toxin. The second problem, though, deals with terrorists.

"If they develop the technology, then any lab in any country can use the same technology and make harmful organisms," Just said.

"And the problem is not limited to humans. We have no idea what the possible effects are on the rest of the ecosystem."

—Darryl Coombs

A technician in UK's recombinant DNA lab. The researcher in charge of the University's lab denies the charge that lab technicians are careless and therefore a hazard to the general public's safety.

Dickson conceded that if it were possible to get an organism to produce a toxin, the present guidelines which are drawn up by the National Institutes of Health would be "ineffective." However, he argues that so far, the organisms only survive under laboratory conditions, and if many were released into the environment, they would die.

"In fact," claimed Dickson, "it's even difficult to keep recombinant organisms alive in the laboratory, much less the external environment. All the evidence is against the possibility of creating an organism that produces toxins and grows in the wild, but I can't guarantee you it won't happen."

"Nobody will guarantee that recombinant DNA work is completely safe," said Just. "Not even the most ardent supporters of it. The thing is, we're not talking about possibilities and statistics, but we're talking about human lives and damage to our ecosystem."

"Fifty years ago, people thought it was ridiculous to think of sending man to the moon. But now, 50 years later, we think nothing of it. The same could apply to recombinant DNA research."

Just also contested the credibility of many of the lab workers involved in recombinant DNA research.

"I was in a lab where they were doing it, and the workers get sloppy. Why? Because many of the workers have never even taken a microbiology course...most of their experience is in biochemistry.

"This is why I want to introduce a non-lethal pathogen into the working area. If the workers are told they are working (near) salmonella, they will be much more careful so they won't get sick.

"Also, if the pathogen escapes into the lab, they can tell if there's been any contamination because the lab workers will get sick," explained Just.

Dickson also conceded to Just on the point of workers without microbiology experience, but he does not see this as a major problem. According to Dickson, most of the mistakes made in a lab involve only the lab workers, and not the general public.

An example of this would be a lab technician sucking a toxin into his or her mouth while using a pipette. Again Dickson argues:

"Even if you did have some recombinant material flushed down the sink, it would not survive outside the laboratory. If people doing all the yelling and shouting had talked to anyone who knows anything about evolution, they would be quiet.

"We have raised the organisms we work with in a 'nice' environment, and Darwin's theory of evolution states that only the toughest organisms will survive in the outside world."

As the situation stands now, scientists have been able to produce a living organism through recombinant work, and the foreign DNA is already producing some RNA (ribonucleic acid).

However, nobody has yet succeeded in making the bacteria produce a protein. For example, E. Coli producing human insulin, which is one of the goals of DNA researchers.

Although Just opposes the idea of recombinant DNA research, he has no objection to the work being done at UK, because hundreds of labs all over the world are also doing this advanced research.

"The technology is here—the bomb is built. It's like nuclear energy; the potential for doing good is great, but the potential for harm is equally as great. But I'm very defeatist about it. By the time legislation is passed, it will be too late.

"The only hope I have is for an international ban by the United Nations and definitely more stringent regulations by the NIH have never even taken a microbiology course...most of their

More recollections than sorrow

Rupp funeral draws faces from coach's past

By DAVID HIBBITTS
Sports Editor

At his funeral yesterday at the Central Christian Church, former Kentucky basketball coach Adolph Frederick Rupp was remembered in a simple ceremony with Minister Glynn Burke presiding.

Recollections of Rupp's quick wit and his drive for perfection were more prevalent than were the indications of deep sorrow.

Mike Pratt, a forward who played with center Dan Issel on one of Rupp's last teams, took time away from his job as an assistant coach at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte to come to the funeral.

Pratt summarized the mood of the people at the funeral by saying, "It was a good feeling about the man and what he did for basketball. I remember him two ways: during and after my career at UK."

Others who came to pay their last respects to the man who affected the lives of all he touched through his coaching career and afterwards included coaches, players, politicians and members of the media from inside and outside the state.

There from the Kentucky athletic family were Athletic Director Cliff Hagan, Coach Joe Hall, former Athletic Director Harry Lancaster, Harry Chandler, former Kentucky governor and one of Rupp's closest friends, and too many others to name.

C.M. Newton, the current basketball coach at Alabama and also one of Rupp's former players, and Dale Brown, Louisiana State's mentor, came to show their regrets at the passing of the coach who put basketball in the Southeastern Conference on the map.

Gale Gallett, whose Cincinnati Bearcats defeated Eastern Kentucky just last night, was also there.

Present among Rupp's former players were Wallace Jones, Bill Spivey, Cecil Bell, Mike Casey, Pratt, Jim Andrews and others.

Gov. Julian Carroll and Louisville Mayor Harvey Sloane set aside their responsibilities to be at the ceremony. And Furman Bisher, the sports editor of the Atlanta Constitution came from Georgia Tech country.

During the ceremony, Burke praised Rupp for his ability to achieve excellence in his own life, and for the way he demanded the same quality from those with whom he worked.

Burke also reminded the mourners of how Rupp kept his sense of humor during his last few weeks in the hospital. "One day the nurses needed to move him up a little in the bed," Burke said.

"So they said, 'When we count to three, will you (Rupp) help us by pushing yourself up a little?'" So they counted to two and realized that his head needed to be moved down a little. Rupp's response was, "What happened to three?"

After the funeral, the family went with the casket to Lexington Cemetery for a private service.

Have a happy holiday

Today's edition of the Kernel marks the end of our publishing semester. Not to worry, though—we'll be back in January starting with our drop-add edition on the 17th. In the meantime, the staff would like to wish that everyone have a pleasant holiday and rest up for the long haul to spring break. See you next year.

Med bill won't help

State Sen. Tom Easterly's (D-Frankfort) proposal to require UK and U of L medical school graduates to practice in-state after graduation is neither the best or fairest way to keep doctors in Kentucky, and may actually hinder health care.

The best students can choose between many medical schools, and will look for the best deal when choosing which institution to attend. Few will consider Kentucky schools if the proposed bill is adopted, the state will lose any chance of getting the best students, let alone keeping them.

Easterly's proposal, would drive students to other states that don't invoke such restrictions. When these students leave, as they inevitably will, the quality of Kentucky's doctors will go deteriorate. In addition, it is quite probably unconstitutional to detail where a person must live and work for five years, as a similar law in Tennessee was judged.

Also, there's no guarantee that students required to practice in-state are going to go to the areas which need doctors the most. Studies have shown that a higher concentration of doctors actually raises salaries. Thus, there's every reason to believe that medical school graduates are going to continue to flock to Louisville and Lexington.

Finally, the proposal gives little consideration to the Medical School's acute financial problems.

Lack of money is the major problem and cramming more bodies into overcrowded classrooms and overused facilities won't improve the instruction. The school needs more space, a bigger budget and more cooperation from the state government.

If health care in Kentucky is going to improve we must work toward making the state a better place to practice medicine, thereby drawing physicians from other states.

In addition, more medical students can be kept in Kentucky if salaries in rural areas could be subsidized, or if the state would offer voluntary incentives for medical students who agree to practice in these areas.

Laws like the one Easterly has proposed have proven disastrous in Colorado and have been ruled unconstitutional in Tennessee. Please, senator, let's not repeat others' mistakes.

Tis the season... for finals, shoplifting, strikes, broken jaws

BY HARRY B. MILLER III

It certainly is the Christmas season. All of the signs of good will and holiday cheer are in the air.

The first sign the close observer will notice is the general student activity. All of a sudden, students start appearing at the library. They even have books in hand, some of the first time this semester. Dialogue between students is becoming increasingly incomprehensible. Whether it's the body caffeine, drug, or alcohol count, or general lack of sleep, is hard to tell. Students are just making less and less sense as the Christmas break comes nearer and nearer.

Another telling sign can be found in the newspapers. If you're observant enough, you might even witness this particular sign first hand. This one is holiday shoppers. But a particular brand of shoppers. These people are very selective about what they pick up. They are ### growing up rich

very selective in how they pay for the items they choose. So selective in fact that few items ever get paid for.

These shoppers are running a little business of their own. They can be categorized as to how they operate their business. The categories run from surreptitious stuffing into the coat (commonly known as shoplifting), to uninvited home persual (breaking and entering), to the "please deposit your assorted valuables into this rather large paper sack" (armed robbery) category.

I'm not sure what the score is, but I believe that these small businesses are doing quite well. Much better than the businesses they compete with, and better than their official regulatory agency (the Metro P.D.). Just ask C & H Rauch, a substantial, though unwilling, contributor to one of these small businesses.

The UMW coal miners, the coal operators, and Kentucky state officials are all well into the Christmas spirit. The UMW is on strike. The coal operators don't really care about the miners, at least until their reserves become depleted. Non-union mines are being harrassed. Coal haulers are being "asked" to dump their non-union coal on the side of the road. I expect that, in deference to the holidays, the aforementioned workers will not start shooting at each other until after the first of the year.

Also on strike are Kroger employees, members of the Meat Cutters Union. Starting today, a group of farmers are going on strike. They call themselves American Agriculture. They are unhappy with the prices their products are bringing. The farmers hope that a strong show of support from the farming community for the strike will convince the government to increase existing price supports.

Israel, Egypt, and the U.S. are trying to put together a pre-Geneva conference to discuss the Arab-Israeli conflict. But in keeping with the spirit of brotherly love so often associated with this time of year, no one is planning to attend the conference except the organizers. What happens when you have a peace conference and no one shows up?

Finally, Kermit Washington of the Los Angeles Lakers gave his own rendition of what this time of year means to him. He evidently became distressed by how one recent game with the Houston Rockets was progressing. So distressed in fact that he decided to take his frustrations out on a Houston player during the game.

That Houston player, Rudy Tomjanovich is now in the hospital with a broken nose and jaw. Washington has been fined $10,000 and suspended for 60 days by the NBA.

This is the last Kernel of 1977. I will no longer be on the paper's staff next semester. This is unfair to those who feel this column deserves to be refuted, complimented, etc. I have a plan to rectify this situation.

If you have any comments about this week's column, or about anything else that has appeared in this space the past semester, please call (213) 875-9611. I don't live at that number. I don't even know who does live at that number. But call anyway. Maybe you'll get someone to listen to you.

Harry B. Miller III is finished.

Writer sounds off, but will you reply?

To be perfectly honest, I had many selfish reasons for joining the Kernel staff. I wanted to get experience for possible employment. I wanted the money, and I guess, to be real crass, I also desired a degree of personal gratification.

But there was something deeper. I really wanted to add some element of controversy to this community (Lexington), because it always seems so sleepy and apathetic.

So I got involved by covering the mayor's race, which evolved to coverage of broader community political issues. I got myself immersed in the issue of juveniles housed in the county jail and the firing of the Legal Aid director who filed suit to get them out, Clyde Simmons.

Along with Charles Main, I wrote a three-part piece that attacked individuals and policies the local papers chose to ignore. We stuck our necks out, and tackled Lexington's political machine.

It was hard work, and frustrating, and the damnable part is, it received no attention outside the journalism community. There were no letters to the Kernel, there was no response.

It became very discouraging to try to make waves, to stir up a little shit, only to have the Kernel filled with letters about noise in the library, a New Yorker who hates Lexington and was foolish enough to put her ignorance in writing, and other such trivia.

Sounds like sour grapes, probably, but I hoped some people would care.

If the next mayor is controlled by coal interests, if this city is going to be dominated by a very vocal minority of bible-thumpers, if kids are going to be thrown into the joint with adults because the city doesn't want to build them an adequate facility where they can learn there is certain behavior society won't tolerate (while there's still a chance to save them), isn't that enough to cause people to show some indignation?

ken kagan

Apparently not. What a damned pity, too. What's wrong out there? Are you all too comfortable to realize that although this a wealthy city, where the living is easy, there are desperate problems below the surface?

Listen, kids. I know how much it means to everyone to get good grades so you can get into graduate school or get a good job, and I know how good it feels to listen to music and get high and drink beer, but there's far more to life than that, and that real fine comfortable feeling can slip away without your even knowing it.

I'm not even sure what I'm trying to say, except please wake up and get involved. Just let us know we're reaching you, at the very least. Perhaps provide some encouragement, because, after all, journalists are human, too.

See you next semester. Have a nice vacation.

Ken Kagan will mellow out over the vacation, and will return refreshed and ready to deal with rising bile in January.

Book exchange

As a concerned student, I'd like to ask the students of UK to support the Student Government (SG) Book Exchange. The exchange is on shaky ground this year and unless students participate it may well go under for good.

Although those who used the exchange received better book deals than those offered from the bookstores, their number was not sufficient to offset the labor costs of processing books.

Another year of financial loss will surely reduce the chances that SG will attempt to make the exchange an on-going project, a status it is worthy of.

The urgency of your participation is felt all the more in light of the Kennedy-Wallace merger. No longer will these two bookstores be in competition for your dollar.

The exchange is not asking for a profit, rather it offers you a service while under selling the bookstores across the board.

For those not aware of the exchange, here's a brief outline of its operation.

From 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. next Monday through next Wednesday in both the Student Center and the Complex Commons, areas will be set up for students to turn in old textbooks.

In return, the students will receive receipts. Over holiday break the books will be gathered into a store-like arrangement in the Student Center.

During the first week of the new semester all texts will be on sale at a price the bookowner decides (the exchange offers a list of suggested prices), and in roughly the second week of the semester checks will be issued to the bookowners whose books have sold.

Unsold books will be returned. The seller receives more for used texts and the buyer beats the bookstore price on his new semester's texts.

For a successful exchange the collection of texts is the all important first phase. To repeat, this will be going on at the Student Center and the Complex Commons from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. next Monday through next Wednesday.

Please support the exchange.

Recycled merci

On behalf of the Environmental Action Society, I would like to thank those members of the University community who took part in our newspaper recycling program.

We hope that the several collection points on campus prove only to be a beginning to our recycling efforts here at UK.

Funds received from the program are used for research and educational activities dealing with environmental issues. I would also like to invite all of you to feel free to take part in our expanded program of activities in the spring.

Remember, there will be no newspaper pick-up between Dec. 14 and Jan. 18 because of the Christmas break. Once, again, thank you for your cooperation.

Agriculture engineering graduates first woman

By ANITA STURGILL
 Kernel Reporter

The first woman to earn a UK degree in agriculture engineering will graduate in December. Lori Ewen of Middletown, one of three December graduates of the agriculture engineering department, has a fulltime staff position waiting for her in the department.

mineshaft in Pikeville is one project on which Ewen is working.

We're looking at the energy considerations," she said.

"The mine stays at 57 degrees in the winter and that's warm compared to the outside. In the summer, we use it to cool the greenhouse."

with students on a personal basis. Jobs in the field are plentiful and interesting, she said.

"Someday I'd like to own an energy-efficient farm and do my own research," she said.

The agriculture department has similar working greenhouses like this where lettuce, broccoli and chrysanthemums are grown, Ewen said.

Being the only woman in her classes made Ewen self-conscious during her first weeks at UK, she said.

"I've overcome that feeling, and I think of myself as equal to the men students. The only time I've had preferential treatment is when the students play volleyball.

"They either don't let me hit it, or if I hit it and miss it, they say 'good try,'" she said.

Albums of '77

Many oldies; few goodies

The year 1977 has not been an ordinary year for rock and roll. If it does go down in history for anything, it will be the fact that age-old groups found success that had previously escaped them. This is reflected in the five top ten selections printed above. Little Feat's Time Loves A Hero, named high on three lists, was the sixth effort for the group. Jimmy Buffett also hit the charts, and the phenomenal rise of Fleetwood Mac continued as Rumours sat at the top of the charts for over 40 weeks. Several of the artists on the top ten charts have played concerts in Lexington during the year, both at UK and Rupp Arena. Crosby, Stills and Nash; Fleetwood Mac; Jimmy Buffett; Little Feat; Jethro Tull; Emmylou Harris; the Bernie Leadon-Michael Georgiades Band and New Grass Revival all played and two others—Santana and Firefall—were canceled.

Five albums appeared on three of the lists. Rumours, Time Loves A Hero, Heavy Weather, Changes in Latitudes... and Aja were the most popular albums among the Kernel's panel of semi-experts. All the critics agreed that the past year had not been a bumper crop for albums.

CARY WILLIS, up-and-coming arts reporter, reflects on the year's best albums:

1. Rumours by Fleetwood Mac
2. Nether Lands by Dan Fogelberg
3. Book of Dreams by Steve Miller
4. Time Loves A Hero by Little Feat
5. Aja by Steely Dan
6. Works, Volume 1 by Emerson, Lake and Palmer
7. Changes in Latitudes, Changes in Attitudes by Jimmy Buffett
8. JT by James Taylor
9. American Stars 'N' Bars by Neil Young
10. Freefall by Dixie Dreggs

AD Hagan discusses his career

By JAMIE VAUGHT
Assistant Sports Editor

(Editor's note: This interview with UK athletic director Cliff Hagan took place just a few days before coach Adolph Rupp died last Saturday night.)

After UK athletic director

Cliff Hagan launched his long basketball career at Owensboro (Ky.) High School, where he led his team to the state championship in 1949. He became one of the most popular players ever produced in Kentucky by the late coach Adolph Rupp. He was a two-time All-American in 1952 and 1954, playing on Wildcat teams that won 26 of 91 games. A G-4 center, Hagan also set a dozen Southeastern Conference records and a then NCAA season record of 528 rebounds in 1952.

While at UK, he took part in many activities outside basketball. He was a member of Sigma Nu Fraternity, Student Government, the Baptist Student Union, the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and twice was selected among the top ten students in the College of Education.

After serving two years in the Air Force, Hagan played ten years in the National Basketball Association with the St. Louis Hawks. He was a six-time NBA All-Star selection before moving to the rival American Basketball Association as the Dallas Chaparrals' player-coach for three years.

Hagan then returned to UK and became the school's assistant athletic director in 1972. He succeeded Harry Lancaster as director on July 1, 1975.

In this Kernel exclusive interview, Hagan talked about his playing days, his coach Adolph Rupp and the current plans for the school's athletic program.

shoot, run and shoot—all night long. Give that young fan a ticket to the VU-UK game during the Adolph Rupp years and he would have been glad to pass up any other game on the home schedule.

The UK legend had been growing for the kid until the day of March 4, 1967. The Wildcats were struggling horribly that year and came to Nashville with a 12-12 record. But all the young fan could notice before the game was that man in the brown suit. And why did he brown so, but still appear to be in a pleasant mood?

Rupp's team that year still had a few capable leftovers from Rupp's Runts, including Louie Dampier, Pat Riley and Chad Jaracz. Dampier had played an unforgettable game at Vandy the year before, scoring a Memorial Gym record 42 points in a crucial 105-90 UK victory.

Guard Jay Shidler is beginning his comeback after a long layoff caused by an ankle sprain in October. After scoring six points and playing tight defense in the 73-56 win at Kansas, Shidler should join the strongest cast of challengers to

Needs a couple of weeks

Shidler's comeback comes from bench

By BOB STAUBLE
Kernel Reporter

Monday night's UK victory against the patient forces of coach Frank McGuire's Gamecocks illuminated a couple of things. Perhaps the most important point is that UK's bench strength is a capable and necessary component for Kentucky's highly-touted Cats.

Sophomore guard Jay Shidler will attest to that. Shidler is on the proverbial comeback trail after he broke a bone in his foot on the first day of practice in October. His first action of the 1977-78 season came last Saturday as he netted two of his three tries from the floor and added two free throws against Kansas. Shidler played for ten minutes in the victory over South Carolina, and although he missed on his three attempts, the fans are being patient toward his recovery.

"I'll be a couple of more weeks," he said after the Monday night match. "I had quite a few mental errors tonight, so it'll take me a little time to straighten them out. I've waited around after practice on some days to practice extra. I really felt good (during the game with South Carolina). I wasn't tired at all, but I was just a little anxious. Part of it was playing for the first time this year in front of the home crowd."

The situation is that it will be several weeks before Shidler gets back his consistency, but his conditioning peak should arrive sooner. Shidler's confidence is apparently not in doubt, as the 6-1 guard will still not hesitate in launching his patented shot—the 20-25 foot jumper. Indeed, the crowd cheered even when Shidler was off target Munday night. Shidler's teammate Rick Robey summed up his importance.

"Jay provides a big spark for the team when he comes out. A BIG spark. He's still a little off in his shooting touch, but that will come around in few weeks," he said.

Coach Joe Hall should be commended for holding Shidler out of action until the foot was completely healed. A premature return could have meant a premature season's end, but as his condition stands, the sophomore guard is steadily returning to Kentucky's unwritten standard of excellence.

With Shidler's return, Hall finds himself confronted with every coach's dream—too many deserving players for the two guard positions available. Playmaker Kyle Macy appears to have cemented his bid for one of the two spots.

But Shidler joins Dwane Casey, Tim Stephens and Chris Gettelfinger in challenging starter Truman Clayton for the other.

UK fans shouldn't despair, for in a few short weeks, the team thinks those fans will find out that Shidler has lost only one thing from last year's stellar start—his bleach blond hair. Yes, he's still shootin' 'em from the popcorn machine.

Hagan tells about Rupp and career

Q: As a player, did you like coach Adolph Rupp?

Hagan: As a high school basketball player in Owensboro, Ky., coach Rupp was THE coach. He was the last word in everything about basketball. So you know you had to respect him for that and respect him for the two NCAA championships, the conference championships and the olympic championships that he won, and all that before I came to the university I had a great deal of respect for coach Rupp.

He was very tough and very hard and gave very few compliments, but we were highly successful the four years that I was here at UK in the 1950's. So with all that success and everything else, we had a great relationship. I think the team had a great relationship with coach Rupp. I liked coach Rupp as a player and I like him today.

Q: How much does coach Rupp mean to you?

Hagan: I think he means to me what he means to other people in the state of Kentucky and the other basketball players that played for him. Perhaps being a player for coach Rupp myself, being a native Kentuckian, being a professional player, being a professional coach, coming back to the institution and looking at the program internally and how it all revolves around each other—I think that I'm in a better position to really appreciate the real significance that a coach has for his program. I appreciate what he has done for basketball in this country.

We made a big pitch to the NCAA selection committee about hosting the NCAA finals and a big part of that pitch was the contribution that coach Rupp had made to basketball in Kentucky, the U.S. and the whole world. We were fighting a very fine city in New Orleans for that. I expect to get that tournament very soon. After New Orleans has it, we're going to make another pitch for it to the coming summer and I expect to be successful in that venture.

You're young when you come to school and you're impressionable and you're really only known your high school coach, and that had a great influence on your life. It's hard to say what influence.

You're young when you come to school. You're impressionable and you're really only known your high school coach. That had a great influence on your life. It's hard to say what influence coach Rupp has on you but you certainly know that it does because the decisions I make I can easily contribute to coach Rupp with our relationship throughout the years.

My secretary tells me I'm a perfectionist. I think some of that had to rub off on me when I was a player under coach Rupp. We worked hard after hour on the finest detail of the game until it was right and was not willing to expect the second best. He made you think so you could be the best, and that's a big part of being best. I think that sort of rubbed off on the players and to coach Rupp. It's rubbed off on all the fans in Kentucky. They expect the very best. The basketball team is expected to win the NCAA championship this year and if they don't, they (the fans) are going to be disappointed.

I think that's a great help to the program when you've got your fans expecting you to win and not accepting anything else. I think, in this situation, the coaches tend to perform better and our athletes tend to live up to expectations.

Q: What was your biggest moment in college basketball?

Hagan: Well, there have been a lot of them. I guess it's probably my first freshman game. I came to school right out of high school in January. I was a mid-term graduate because I entered grade school at mid-term cause my birthday is in January. You know that first game (as a college freshman) and the first varsity game that I became eligible to play was played in my hometown in Owensboro. Those two games were something I'll never forget.

I also remember the championship game in the NCAA when I was a sophomore, but I remember vividly going through the 1953-1954 season when we were undefeated and coach Rupp wasn't feeling well. He was having heart problems and we had problems on the fact that we had not been able to play the year before because we were on suspension. All we did was practice—we were not allowed to play anyone.

But after sitting out the whole year before, I scored 51

LadyKats bounce back by blasting Murray, 102-64

By Brian Rickerd
Kernel Staff Writer

Coming off last week's 89-69 loss at Tennessee Tech, the LadyKats bounced back in impressive fashion last night, easily defeating the Murray State Lady Racers 102-64 at Memorial Coliseum.

The LadyKats simply looked like a new team from start to finish. A five-footer by forward Maria Donhoff put Kentucky on top 2-0 after 30 seconds of play and UK ran away with it.

After grabbing a 16-8 lead, Kentucky reeled off 11 consecutive points, six by sophomore forward Debra Oden who scored on the front end of three fast breaks.

The Racers, unable to solve UK's tight 1-3-1 zone, never led in the contest. The LadyKats held their leading scorer, center Jackie Mounts, scoreless in the first eight minutes.

Kentucky's biggest margin of the half came at 43-15 with three minutes remaining on a layup by Pam Browning, who returned to action after missing four games with an ankle sprain. The LadyKats held a 47-20 halftime margin.

"We were pretty psyched," LadyKats coach Debbie Yow said. "We wanted to run; we had a long talk about it before the game."

In the second half, the Racers outscored UK 6-0 in the first 1:20 but Murray got no closer.

The LadyKats hit the century mark 100-63 on two free throws by sophomore center Laura Upton with just 28 seconds left.

Afterward, Yow said she was surprised by the margin over the Racers. "The eight day layoff really helped us," she said. "We worked on a lot of problems. Kentucky was led by another impressive performance from Oden, who had 24 points, 16 rebounds, leading the team in both categories.

"We had a better attitude tonight," Oden said. "We were more aggressive."

Oden, who has become the LadyKats' version of James Lee coming off the bench, said she doesn't mind that role. "Just as long as I contribute and help the team," she said.

Liz Lukschu followed with 17 points and 10 rebounds while Donhoff added 11.

The LadyKats, who ran their record to 6-2, held an incredible 66-26 edge on the boards.

UK will go back on the road, playing games at Morehead this Saturday night and Louisville on Monday. Their next home game will be Dec. 21 against Dayton.

In a preliminary game, the LadyKat junior varsity squad also enjoyed an easy win, defeating Spaulding College of Louisville 81-47. The JV's, who evaded their record at 1-1, were led in scoring by freshman guard Terri Brown and sophomore center Susan Engan with 12 points apiece.

UK billiards team has won every match in three semesters over all who dare

By GEORGE DEMIC
Kernel Reporter

Three rail billiards, the sport from which all other billiard games are derived, is "the most sophisticated form of any billiard game," according to UK head coach Jim Heath.

The sport, also known as carom billiards and three-cushion billiards, is meant for the advanced player who has mastered the fundamentals. Slance (the use of the hand as a bridge), grip, stroke, and knowledge of english (not the language) are the tools required to play.

Incorporating three billiards, a cue for each player and a third ball (red), players attempt to strike both the opponent's cue and the red ball, plus strike an object ball on the table at least three times.

A successful attempt results in one "billiard." The game is, of course, played on a pocketless table. Through three semesters, the UK billiards team has managed to defeat every opponent brave enough to challenge them. The team has improved its 4-0 record of last year to its current standing of 6-0. The victims of this semester have included Vanderbilt and the Louisville Pennington Club, a place so exclusive that a coat and tie are part of the entry admission.

"The best players in the world have played there," Heath said. "We beat Vandy 14-2, but what's really impressive is that we beat the Pennington Club 12-4."

Team leaders Jerry Vanderhoff, Ray Guffey, Jeff Bradley and Ted Davis all won by 3-1 margins. "We're so balanced that on any given day, my number, four man, could beat my number one," Heath added. "That's one of the things that makes me say this is the best collegiate team in the country."

"Another thing that makes me say this is my belief that we have the best college player in the country in Vanderhoff."

World Pocket Billiard Trick Shot Champion Paul Gerni coached UK Dec. 2. A Vanderhoff vs. Gerni match materialized, but even with his trick shot talents, Gerni couldn't prevent a 25-6 pasting by Vanderhoff.

Heath's team has become as fierce in billiard circles as the roundball cats are in the basketball world.

"I have one boy who'll bite your ear off to beat you," Heath said. "Nobody likes to lose, but when these guys go to play a match, (the competition) really brings out the best in them." Heath provides a good argument for having interest in billiards. "It's not the kind of sport where you peak young and have to stop playing in 35 like you do in football or basketball," he said. "I'll be able to play until I have arthritis so bad that I can't walk or move my elbow. It's great recreation!"

"A typical match lasts about eight hours, and unless your legs are in shape for all the standing and walking, you're going to have a hard time keeping your mind on the game."

"And women have every bit the ability to compete against men. One of the best three-cushion players in the world is a woman. It's good social activity."

College billiards died in 1971 due to lack of funding. Last year Vanderbilt coach Louis Little wrote letters to major universities asking them to reinstate the program. Consequently, Heath, who was the UK Straight Pool (pocket billiards) Champion three times, was appointed coach.

The team practices each Thursday and Friday. Anyone interested in lessons may contact Heath during practice sessions (1:30 to 4:30 p.m.).

One survives Evansville team plane crash

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP)—Twenty-six bodies bodies had been recovered four hours after a chartered DC-3, carrying the University of Evansville basketball team, crashed in rain and heavy fog and burst into flames shortly after takeoff from Dress Regional Airport last night.

Passengers included coach Bob Watson, in his first year as coach of the Purple Aces; sports information director Greg Kripping, also in his first year with the university; radio play-by-play announcer Mary Bates and the entire 14-member squad.

State police said three persons among the 31 aboard survived the initial crash, but two of them died en route to Deaconess Hospital and the third, described as a young, white male, was reported in critical condition.

Other bodies were removed from the crash site in a railroad boxcar. The identities of the victims were not immediately available.

The university had no comment, but state police confirmed that the plane was carrying the team. A spokeswoman for the charter service, Mary Hartford, said there were 26 passengers and a crew of five aboard.

"We can confirm a DC-3, originating in Indianapolis, arrived in Evansville, where 31 persons boarded," Montgomery said. "These 31 comprised the Evansville basketball team. It crashed within two minutes of takeoff."

The airplane, chartered from National Jet Service Inc. of Indianapolis, was en route to Nashville, Tenn. The Evansville basketball team was scheduled to play Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro tonight.

The crash site was near Penn Central railroad tracks, and bodies were removed from the crash site in a railroad boxcar.

A temporary morgue was set up near the crash site, which was just of the main runway at Evansville's Dress Regional Airport.

turnout. There's a hill about 300 to 400 feet above the airport level about a mile away. The plane disappeared into the fog and about a minute and a half later I heard his engines cutting out and he went down. I saw it explode in flames."

"He, the pilot, took off on the runway heading due south," said Rick Nutter, an employee of Metro Beechcraft at the airport who heard the crash.

"As soon as he made the liftoff he started making a left

Hagan recalls scoring record

points in the first game of 1953-1954 season. The players carried me off the floor. I think with all the emotion surrounding that game and my parents there watching, that was probably the highlight of my college basketball career.

Q: Why did Kentucky decline a NCAA tournament berth after the Wildcats (25-9) were ranked first nationally in 1954. You were a member of that team.

Hagan: We went through the season entirely without any losses. There was some confusion and quite a bit of trouble with where we were to play against LSU. We refused to go down there and play. They refused to come up here and play. There was a schedule disagreement. Bob Pettit was on that LSU team that year. The Southeastern Conference decided we would have a playoff game in Nashville, Tenn. for the conference championship. We went down there and we won (63-56).

But after the game, coach Rupp was notified and talked to us in the dressing room that Lou Tsioropoulos, Frank Ramsey and I would not be eligible to participate in the NCAA tournament because three of us went to graduate school. We were a big part of that team—the three of us. Coach Rupp did not want to go to the NCAA without us playing so Kentucky declined the invitation.

That always bothered me a little bit and it bothers me more now than it did then because we placed such a great effort in getting our student athletes to get a degree while they're at school. We didn't know that those were the rules of the game. It was too late when we discovered that the rules said if you enter graduate school, you can't participate in the NCAA championship. So for being a conscientious student, the three of us were again penalized and the university was penalized again for something that wasn't quite fair.

Q: How did you feel in 1970 when Dan Issel broke your all-time school record (51 points) when he pumped in 53 against Mississippi? Hagan: I don't remember feeling anything. I probably didn't even know about it. Let's see, in 1970, I was still in Dallas at that time. I scored 51 points in 1954 so that's 16 years later. But the records really represent a certain time and era. All records will eventually be broken by somebody so it's not a big deal with me.

I know Jack Givens has just moved past me in the UK scoring column, but I will quickly point out that I only played two and a half years on the varsity, and my records only go for two and a half years when the freshmen then were not eligible to play. Now you are being compared against the people who have played four years as Jack has done and that makes a great difference.

Q: What do you think is your biggest achievement since you became the athletic director at UK two and half years ago?

Hagan: Well, my achievements can only be cast in phrases of "our" achievements, the department's achievements, the athletic association's achievements rather than my personal achievements, but a lot has happened since I joined the university in 1970.

We've moved into a brand new football facility and we've also moved into a brand new basketball facility. That's been a major undertaking that most athletic directors are not confronted with. Maybe once every 25 years you make some major change, but this all happened within just a few years of each other.

I guess another important thing is the continued high level of basketball competition that we've been able to maintain with the transition from Coach Rupp to Joe Hall. A lot of people thought that there would be an immediate downfall of Kentucky basketball. But tradition is exactly what it is and that has a tendency to carry over if you have the right people.

I think the second obvious thing is the football program. Being nationally rated and having two consecutive years of extremely fine football would have to be one of the major things that I would think of immediately as significant to me and to the state.

Q: What has been your major disappointment as an athletic director.

Hagan: I really haven't had any major disappointments. I think the job of being athletic director is a very tough one in terms of public relations because of the number of problems and people that you have to deal with daily.

Q: Do you and the UK athletic Association have any construction plans for a football dormitory?

Hagan: At this time, I know of no plans for a football dormitory. Coach (Fran) Curci has told me that he's not interested in any plans for a football dormitory. This is not to say that some time in the future there might be some interest.

Q: What is your next major project to be done soon for the athletic program?

Hagan: We have things going on continually in maintaining the facilities that we have right now. You know we always wanted a fine swimming pool and I think the university feels a need for a fine pool for the students and athletes for its recreational needs. This is something that I'm looking forward to and I'd like to see that it's a full olympic-size pool with a diving well and all that sort of thing to upgrade our program across the board as much as we can. It's unbelievable, this old pool is still up here. It was built in 1950 when I was in school. Perhaps in the next phase of the Seaton Building, a pool can go into that.

Q: At this point, are there any plans to expand the seating capacity at the Commonwealth Stadium?

Hagan: Well, no, not really, but we are studying the possibilities of expanding the stadium. We want to make sure if we need it or not.

Q: Have you given any thought of coaching again some day?

Hagan: No, I don't think I want to coach again. I don't think I'm the right kind of person for that job. I know what it is like. I've no thoughts of returning to coach some day.

Houdini's: plenty of party tools

Parties are great, but wait till you have one at Houdini's. Never before and nowhere else in this magnanimous Commonwealth has a place gone to greater lengths to satiate insatiable partying appetites of the citizenry.

Before I go on, let me mention that Houdini's is in the Idlehour Shopping Center near the intersection of Fontaine and Richmond Rds. It's not a regular bar because Rudy, the owner, doesn't have a liquor license. Instead, he concentrates his efforts on renting Houdini's out to people who want to throw parties.

And a party is what you get. Depending on what night you want to reserve the place, the rental price gets lower with bigger turnouts. Parties of 300 people are common and the best part about it is that you can make money while sponsoring the party. The cover charge pays for the rent and other expenses while a certain percentage goes into the pockets of the sponsors.

Another advantage. Your private party will be private. No outsiders. Just people in your fraternity, sorority, office, organization or clique.

Not having a liquor license ironically gives Houdini's an edge for holding parties. You can have a party there on Sundays, and you'll be unaffected by the citywide 1 a.m. closing time on other days. Of course, no alcoholic beverages are sold there, but why should you buy a drink when you can bring your own. Setups, cups and ice can also be arranged for in the rental contract.

The distinguishing feature of Houdini's is that you can throw any kind of private party you like. Disco is very popular, made possible by the spacious dance floor, lighting and sound equipment. And Rudy will arrange for just about any kind of entertainment available that's within reason. The Hatfield Clan, French mimes, magicians, live drummers and costume balls and bizarre acts are or have been part of Rudy's favoring of the unusual. Food can be thrown in, too. Roast pig and a luau highlighted two recent parties.

So if your organization wants to throw a party for a lot of people at an affordable cost, keep Houdini's in mind. Parties there aren't easily forgotten.
