Dear Brother,

Father arrived here, safe but very fatigued, on Friday morning. I return my sincere thanks for the kind presents which you and brother William sent me; but must beg that you will excuse me for not accepting yours, as I am afraid while in London with the small salary which you at present receive it would straiten you if I had taken it.

We hope shortly to have William with us, which will make your situation so solitary that I think you will be glad to follow him as soon as you can. — I saw Sister on Friday she was very well and desired her love to you and brother.

I remain your affectionate brother
Alfred Cox.
