SG keeps violation claims secret

Confusion: Election investigator says publishing claims unfair, but three of four presidential candidates disagree

By Paul Leighty
STAFF WRITER

Student Government is not releasing information about election violation claims until next week, a decision that contradicts open records practices in state and local elections and is against the wishes of some candidates and SG members. Election Investigator Eric Mills said he had decided not to release any claims to the public until 4 p.m. Tuesday, the deadline to file claims. He said releasing allegations before any investigations would be unfair to accused candidates. The procedure for filing claims is dictated by the SG constitution, although it does not mention whether claims should be available to the public or kept secret.

Three presidential candidates and one person working on the election said the claims should be made public.

Candidate Matt Falk said he had tried to ensure that the claims would be accessible. He said he had asked SG adviser John Herbst and Kellen Baker, the Elections Board of Supervision chairman, both of whom agreed.

Candidate Kyle Jewell said, "claims should be disclosed so that voters can be aware of what's going on."

Candidate David Hutchinson said the claims should be public. "They're definitely trying to keep it a secretive organization," he said.

WAR IN IRAQ U.S. admits to use of cluster bombs

Weapons: U.S. Central Command is looking into deaths of 11 civilians in Hillah from cluster bombs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The United States is showering targets in Iraq with the most unpredictable weapons in its arsenal: tiny cluster bombs so deadly they can demolish a tank, but so erratic they can take years to blow up.

The U.S. Central Command in Doha, Qatar, said it is investigating reports that cluster bombs killed at least 11 civilians in Hillah, a city 60 miles south of Baghdad and the scene of heavy fighting.

The military acknowledged for the first time Wednesday that cluster bombs were being deployed. Human rights groups have called for their ban, and their use during the campaign to oust Saddam Hussein is particularly sensitive because of the stated aim of the U.S.-led force to minimize civilian casualties.

Cluster bombs have a very bad reputation, which they deserve," said Colin King, author of Jane's Explosive Ordnance Disposal guide and a British Army bomb disposal expert from the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

Election: High voter turnout attributed to intense candidate campaigning; students say they voted because they want to have an impact on campus

By Patrick McDonald
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Wednesday's voter turnout for the Student Government elections was higher than the total election turnouts since 1995.

About 1,200 students voted during the first of two days of elections, said Nathan Denney, a marketing sophomore and member of Election Board of Supervisors.

"If I remember correctly, we've already exceeded the votes we had last year, so we're probably going to double that amount this year," Denney said. "Students are being more active this year, so that's really good in terms of voter turnout. It seems to me like the candidates are a lot more active."

The positions that students are voting for during this year's election are president, 15 at-large senators who represent the entire student body and college senators. A student survey on whether or not an on-line ticket lottery for men's basketball games should be developed is also included on the ballot.

Many students who voted said that they had friends who were campaigning, so they decided to exercise their political right and vote.

"I decided to vote because I wanted to be more pro-active on campus and to actually have my say in the election. If I take the time to vote, I feel as if I am helping the student body," said Jennifer Weaver, an arts administration student.

Students said they expected the candidates to make Lexington and the UK campus a better place for students. They also said they expect the candidates to work for the students' needs.

"I would like to see the Student Government here on campus have a better relationship with the urban county government and possibly find a way to keep bars open later," said Molly Galbraith, communications and finance sophomore. "Also, I would like to see them organize more campus activities."

The winner of the elections will be announced at 9 p.m. at the free speech area located near the Student Center.

Students say Reynolds Building, surrounding area are unsafe

BRITTANY CLARK | KERNEL STAFF

Dean of Students Victor Hazard addresses safety issues at the Reynolds Building. Students there say they feel unsafe.

By Derek Poore
STAFF WRITER

Sandra Joiner worries about walking down Scott Street. "You do feel an incredible sense of fear going out at night," said Joiner, an art studio and philosophy freshman. "I've been accosted several times by people who've been trying to get money from me, trying to sell things to me, or just harassing."

Joiner and about 30 others gathered Wednesday night at the Reynolds warehouse complex on Scott Street to speak out about safety and the spider and mouse infestation in and around the building.

"It's pathetic — you live in constant fear," Joiner said. Administrators and representatives from the UK police department tried to soothe students who expressed their concerns about the area. The Reynolds building, which houses the Fine Arts department, is located behind the Taylor Education Building and Dickey Hall.

The students were most concerned about safety outside the building.

New Arts and Sciences dean already planning

By Rebecca Neal
STAFF WRITER

The new dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Steven Hoch, is consulting faculty and students before making major changes to the college, said the chairwoman of the search committee.

"Right now, he's calling faculty, getting information and asking questions," said Jeannine Blackwell, the associate dean of the Graduate School.

Provost Mike Nietzel named Hoch, an administrator from the University of Iowa, the dean of the university's largest college Monday. The search committee recommended Hoch be chosen for the position.

Hoch was in surgery Wednesday and was unavailable for comment.

He and the other candidates visited UK in February and met with students and faculty. Blackwell said Hoch enjoyed meeting students and seeing the campus.

"He had a meeting with students and he seemed to just be having a great time. ... I practically had to drag him away," she said.

She described him as an "energetic" scholar who understood the university's financial and academic goals. "He knows that a modern university has to work to find its own resources," Blackwell said.

In a previous interview with the Kernel, Hoch said he found President Lee Todd's Top-20 research goal to be an ambitious challenge.

"It should be done, but it will require a lot of work from the faculty, students and administration," he said.

Hoch is the associate provost for academic programs and the dean of international programs at the University of Iowa. He earned his bachelor's degree in history from Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., and his master's and doctorate degrees from Princeton. He has also studied at Moscow State University.

He will replace the college's current dean, Howard Groch, Groch will continue to teach physics at UK.

Hoch's appointment is subject to approval by the Board of Trustees on May 5. His first day will be July 1.

The other candidates were Kathleen DeWalt of the University of Pittsburgh, Peter Sherwood of Kansas State University and Carl Strikwerda of the University of Kansas.

GUIDE TO THE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

Rachel Watts and Matt Rippetoe

The lowdown
Presidential candidate: Rachel Watts, integrated strategic communications sophomore
Vice presidential candidate: Matt Rippetoe, political science sophomore Experience: Watts and Rippetoe are both SG senators-at-large and have been in SG for two years.
Three main issues:
 • Advocate the student opinion on issues such as the tuition increase and drop fees
 • Improve relationships between SG and the administration, LFUCG student organizations
 • Increase communication between SG and the student body

Commitment, accountability, and, number one, it means being a voice for the students."

- RACHEL WATTS, ON REPRESENTATION

Matt Falk and James Monroe

The lowdown
Presidential candidate: Matt Falk, finance and management junior
Vice presidential candidate: James Monroe, management and economics junior Experience: Falk is the SG senator-at-large and has been involved with SG for a year. Monroe is an SG senator-at-large and has been part of SG since his freshman year.
Three main issues:
 • Protect students from tuition increases and fees for dropping classes by giving students the option of locking in rates
 • Keep Young Library open 24 hours
 • Revise the alcohol policy so portions of campus will be wet

Student Government is in need of an entire culture change."

- MATT FALK

David Hutchinson and Lesli Proffitt

The lowdown
Presidential candidate: David Hutchinson, marketing and management senior
Vice presidential candidate: Lesli Proffitt, history junior Experience: Hutchinson is a SG senator-at-large and has been part of SG for three years. Proffitt was involved with SG her freshman and sophomore years, working mostly on campus safety.
Three main issues:
 • Restore credibility to SG
 • Give more money directly to student organizations for initiating community service projects
 • Be fiscally responsible with students' fees

We want to create an atmosphere of openness and repair the damage left by the financial problems."

- LESLI PROFFITT

Kyle Jewell and Brianna Shaffer

The lowdown
Presidential candidate: Kyle Jewell, political science junior
Vice presidential candidate: Brianna Shaffer, political science and Spanish sophomore Experience: Jewell is not in SG now, but was elected to be LCC college senator last year and has been vice president of the LCC Student Government Association, an at-large senator and a freshman senator. Shaffer has worked in various organizations on campus.
Three main issues:
 • Get students to feel comfortable coming to SG
 • Increase spirit on campus by sponsoring events
 • Increase the academic environment by keeping the Young Library open 24 hours

I want to make SG the best student government on any campus."

Candidate Rachel Watts would not comment about Mills' choice or any claims. Kellen Baker said he wanted the claims to be open, but that "Eric Mills told me not to make the claims available."

Anyone filing a claim must submit it to Baker, who then passes it on to Mills. "He said he (Mills) wanted to see the claims first," Baker said.

At least two claims have been filed. Hutchinson filed a claim on March 12 against candidate Watts and her running mate. He said he found a Watts/Rippetoe flier in the SG office folder and that using SG resources broke election rules.

The constitution says SG may not make resources available to any candidate "unless those resources are available to all candidates."

Baker also filed a claim last week when Chris Perkins, a write-in candidate, hung campaign posters on campus without the approval of SG.

In contrast to the SG decision, Kentucky election laws require election claims at the state and local level to be public record, said Lexington Herald-Leader political reporter Jack Brammer.

The kernel yesterday submitted an open records request seeking access to all filed claims. By Kentucky law, SG has three days to respond to the request.

Mills said that if claims were available to the public and media, "I feel like that promotes people to file bogus claims and try to smear someone else's campaign," and possibly have an adverse effect on the election outcome.

"I'm about doing as fair and as open and as honest an election as we possibly can," Mills said.

WAR

Frank Thorp, said the munitions are playing a tactical role in the battlefield and work well against large targets, such as an airfield. "It's a very effective weapon," he said.

In Baghdad, Iraqi Health Minister Omid Medhat Mubarak accused U.S. and British forces were targeting civilians with cluster bombs. "In Najaf, they destroyed a medical center," he said. "They bombed an ambulance and killed its driver."

The U.S. command has denied targeting civilians. A single cluster bomb can scatter hundreds of tiny bomblets over an area the size of a football field. These bomblets can be packed with rocket-fired artillery shells or dropped while housed in a shell that looks like a regular bomb, but which opens to release scores of parachute-borne bomblets.

Critics denounce the use of cluster bombs because of their sheer numbers — more than 50 million bomblets were dropped during the 1991 Persian Gulf War — and the danger the duds pose to civilians and friendly troops.

A U.S. Marine was killed on Sunday after stepping on an unexploded cluster bomb. In 1991, six U.S. Army combat engineers were killed while disposing of cluster bombs.

Also during the previous Gulf war, one soldier looking for war souvenirs lost a leg in the Iraqi desert when he stuffed a cluster bomb into his pocket. Members of his First Cavalry Division ran to their vehicles, believing the blast was incoming gunfire, and a second soldier died when he stepped on another canister.

King, who also oversaw ordnance disposal in Bosnia and the Falklands, said the United States is dipping into its stockpiles of what he called the worst cluster bomb in existence, the BLU-97.

"Some will just kill you," he said. "This will kill everyone within 20 yards (yards) of you."

King said the yellow, soda can-sized bomblet has two fuses — one set to detonate on impact, and a second to detonate if an unexploded bomb is disturbed on the field. It's a triple-threat weapon, meant to disable armor, kill combatants and start fires. The bomb throws fragments that can penetrate a quarter inch of steel, he said.

"If you pick it up and drop it, there is a good chance it will go off," he said. "It caused massive problems in Kosovo, it caused massive problems in the Gulf, it caused weapons problems in Afghanistan and it's going to cause massive problems in the gulf again."

Cluster bombs are quickly catching up to landmines as the lethal legacy of an old war. Human Rights Watch said ordnance experts in Kuwait, which was heavily bombed after Iraq claimed the country as its own in 1991, were finding roughly 200 cluster bombs per month just last year.

"The United States should not be using these weapons," said Steve Goose, a Human Rights Watch weapons researcher. "Iraqi civilians will be paying the price with their lives and limbs for many years."

Professors: Iraq war will affect diplomacy

By Emily Hagedorn
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

The United States should consider damage control and stop underestimating Iraq's military power, panelists of the Patterson School of Diplomacy and International Commerce said Wednesday.

"If this war is strung out, we will have no leverage at working (with other countries)," said John Stempel, panelist and director of the Patterson School. "If we are a super power, we really need to learn how to play nicely with others."

The four professors from the school held the forum in the Student Center to educate the public on the reasons for and consequences of this war, Stempel said. "I hope people come away with an understanding that it is a complex issue," he said before the forum.

Concerning American strategy, panelists remarked that while the Coalition Forces are making headway in the war, they have been too optimistic about the level of resistance. "We thought that the territory we drove past would be liberated, be friendly," said Eugene Gholz, panelist and assistant professor in the Patterson School. "The enemy is clearly fighting."

Karen Mings, panelist and professor in the Patterson School, concurred. "People will fight for their homeland, even if they don't like their leader," she said.

Iraqi strategy has improved, said panelist Michael Desch, panelist and associate director of the Patterson School. "Iraq has played a weak hand pretty good so far," Desch said.

Iraq's military will try to make the coalition forces kill a large number of Iraqi citizens, bolstering nationalism against the coalition, he added. "Because of the cost of Iraqi lives, we won't be as popular in the Arab world," Desch said.

Desch predicted that many Iraqi soldiers are retreating into Baghdad, which would lure coalition forces in behind them.

"You think sanctions are bad," Gholz said. "Wait until you see a siege. Problems are likely still to come unless we get lucky."

Stempel said that if the United States were graded on diplomacy, it would do poorly. Its aim to end terrorism has left it open to many more wars in the future, which may damage relations with the rest of the world.

Mings said many are overestimating the ability of the coalition forces to rebuild Iraq after the war. "We're not a patient people," she said. "Already we want an end to the war. How will we feel about reconstruction?"

Some audience members felt the discussion was unilateral. "I thought it was rather one-sided," said Sara Hawkins, a communications and political science sophomore. "However, they did have an open mind about other's views."

The panelists disagreed. "There is quite a lot of diversity in the panel," Gholz said.

"Nobody has the right assessment," Stempel said.

REYNOLDS

"I've never felt unsafe inside the building, but my car has been broken into during class," said Violet Sellers, art studio and art history junior.

"I feel scared when my car is right in front because of the lighting, and the area were located in," Sellers said. She also expressed concerns about drivers asking for money.

Dean of Students Victor Hazard said there is a much better chance for change when police and administrators hear from students firsthand. "How do you deny someone that says, 'Hey I was concerned?'" he said.

"Obviously we're taking it seriously, we've got to," Hazard said.

The group discussed the feasibility of students using the CATS bus service instead of parking in the area.

"If you're carrying around a 14-foot long wooden board ... it's extremely difficult," she said. "The buses are only so accommodating to carrying in and transferring that kind of massive equipment load," Joiner said.

Carrying the art equipment makes students even better targets, Joiner said. "Your arms are full of equipment and you have no way to defend yourself," she said.

Students said conditions inside the building, including bad lighting, concerned them.

"The women's bathroom (light) hasn't worked for the past week," said junior nursing student Johanna Hamilton, who has a night class in the building every week.

Said Joiner, "The other day, I was sitting in the sculpture room and one of the lights exploded into flames," said Joiner. "It's just dangerous ... these conditions would not be acceptable on any other building on UK's campus."

Late victory proves Bat Cats will to win

Consistent: Cats battle through six point deficit to beat Cincinnati 10-9

By Adam Sichko
STAFF WRITER

In the seventh inning of a wild game last night, Cincinnati scored its ninth run of the game, regained a three-run lead and seemingly put the game out of reach for the UK baseball team.

But the bats of the Bat Cats were just heating up. Senior Russ Rutherford's game-winning sacrifice fly in the 8th inning gave the Bat Cats a 10-9 victory over Cincinnati.

Rutherford's RBI hit capped a late-inning rally by UK in which the Cats scored four runs in the last two innings. It was also a game that saw seven different UK hurlers take the mound. Both teams combined to throw 12 pitchers.

"It was a long game, and we could have had some let-ups, but we didn't. I'm proud of them," said UK coach Keith Madison.

The first score of the game took place in the third inning. UC (8-19) struck in their half of the inning on a two-run single by third baseman Brad Dorrman. UK (11-17, 0-9 Southeastern Conference) responded with four runs, with first baseman Mike Breyman and third baseman Jake Kungl each slamming two-run homers.

The Bearcats immediately answered in the fourth, exploding for six runs on as many hits, taking an 8-2 lead. For Madison, that was a pivotal inning.

"We gave up six runs early in the game, and we could have folded there. But we kept battling back and competed very well. We competed for nine innings and didn't have any let-ups."

The Bat Cats began to chip away at the UC lead in the bottom of the fifth. UK took advantage of one of three Bearcat errors on the night and scored a pair of runs, trimming the deficit to two.

The Bearcats scored a run in their half of the frame, but the Cats countered with three runs, the last two coming on back-to-back RBI singles from Brad Pickrel and Spencer

Rutherford put the exclamation point on the rally with his sacrifice fly in the eighth, scoring Caleb Stewart from third base, and the Bat Cats took their first lead since the third inning.

"I think we competed well," Rutherford said. "They put that six-run inning on us, but we never gave up and battled back."

Seth Stanley, the last pitcher UK used, notched his second win of the year.

He tossed two perfect innings and added two strikeouts.

"He came in and really shut the door on the Bearcats," Madison said of Stanley's performance.

Cats extend losing streak to 13

Unlucky 13: Despite early lead in second game, Cats could not hold on, losing to Colonels 0-2

By Jeff Patterson
STAFF WRITER

The streak rolls on. The UK softball team (9-26, 1-14 Southeastern Conference) lost its thirteenth straight game Wednesday against Eastern Kentucky.

Errors proved to be costly for the Cats as they lost both games of a doubleheader to EKU (14-10, 1-2 Ohio Valley Conference) by scores of 7-5 and 5-3.

"That (errors) has been a nemesis for us this year," said UK head coach Beth Pruitt. "What we need to do to get over that is to relax."

In the first game of the doubleheader, EKU rode the strength of a second-inning grand slam by Amy Herrington to a 7-5 victory.

EKU sent ten batters to the plate in their seven-run second inning.

After a rocky start, UK's Amy Kendall (6-14) settled down to pitch five consecutive shutout innings in defeat.

Jonelle Cosra (8-5) struck out eight and walked one in her complete game victory.

Down 7-1, UK fought back on the bat of Megan Brooks. Brooks blasted a homer and went 2-3 with three runs scored. UK dwindled the lead to two runs but ultimately fell for the twelfth straight game.

The second game of the double dip started much better for the Cats.

Kendall hit her first career homer in the second inning to give UK a 1-0 lead.

"It was a pretty nice addition to the night," said Kendall.

Crystalie Wolfe (0-4) had a no-hitter in the works before EKU's Bethany Herrington singled to lead off the fourth inning.

EKU evened the score at 3-3 in the fifth inning via four singles - Herrington, Ashley Totten, Jen Christianson and Kelli Bromley.

Jessica Soto (5-5) brought the heat for EKU. She struck out nine batters and allowed only two hits in seven innings.

EKU took a 4-3 lead for good in the seventh on an RBI double by Diana Barera. EKU added one more insurance run taking a 5-3 lead into the final frame.

Soto mowed the Cats down in the bottom of the seventh to seal the victory.

The Cats committed four errors in the two-game set. Poor throwing decisions by the outfielders and errors gave the Colonels plenty of second chances to score.

"Eventually the ball is going to bounce our way," Pruitt said.

UK returns to SEC action this Saturday against 13th ranked South Carolina. The Cats hope to pull off second SEC win. Game time is set for noon.

UK offers unique classes in summer school sessions

Warmer learning: Students study in summer too

By Johnny Dixon
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

This summer UK will offer classes to help ease the boredom and stress that come with semester class schedules.

Some of these suggestions could revamp your summer course load with everything from First Aid techniques to study short stories.

First Aid and Emergency Care (KHP 190) students are guided through the correct methods of traditional bandaging and taught how to use the life-saving heart rescue device called automatic external defibrillator (AED).

"Having these three skills allows for one to react promptly to emergency situations that occur all the time," said Vonnie Colvin, instructor of the class.

Students who participate in this class are taught how to conduct adult and child

CPR through work with mannequins.

"Not a semester goes by that some student doesn't come back and say 'Hey, I'm glad I had this class,'" said Colvin.

Upon completion of the course, students hold certification for the American Red Cross. And, as Colvin mentions, such certification can be very helpful when applying for jobs that involve public involvement.

This year KHP 190 will be held during the first summer session only. Classes are scheduled for Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. The course is worth two credit hours and will be held in 119 Seaton Building.

Feminist Spirituality: Why Women Need the Goddess" (WS 300)

This class will explore how the presence of a female deity impacts how women see themselves as well as how it impacts a culture's view of women. Students will also examine modern practice of goddess religion — its connection to feminism, environmentalism and political activism.

"I think this class is going to be a lot of fun," said Heather Bennett, instructor of the course.

"We're going to do a lot of fun projects." Throughout the course, the class will watch and analyze movies such as The Burning Times conduct creative exercises and do group projects.

But do not be fooled: women are not the only ones to benefit from this class.

"Men will also enjoy this class as they are caught up in male stereotypes," Bennett said.

WS 300, part of the Women's Studies Program, is currently scheduled for Monday through Friday of the second summer session from 10:20 a.m. to 11:20 a.m. and will meet in 145 Patterson Office Tower.

The Short Story (ENG 360) The class will focus on 20th century American short stories.

Students will read authors such as Raymond Carver, Alice Munroe, J.D. Salinger and William Faulkner.

David Durant, instructor of the course, said this class is for those who like to do a lot of reading.

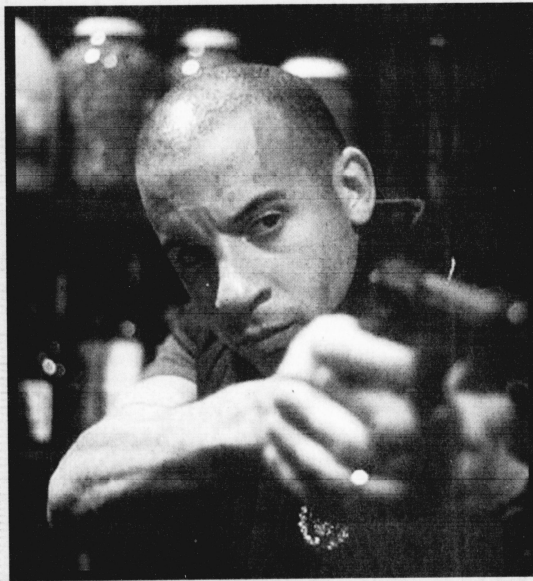

"We will do projects that will include story comparisons, semi-creative assignments and critiques of films based on short stories," Durant said.

"People tend to get highly immersed in it."

ENG 360 will be offered during the second summer session only. The class is scheduled to meet Monday through Friday from 9:10 a.m. to 11:20 a.m. in 333 Classroom Building.

Baghdad's fall won't signal an end to conflict

Riddvan Peshkopia
 KERNEL COLUMNIST

U.S. officials, generals and analysts are speaking more and more about the Baghdad battle, considering it the final battle of the war. Indeed, the entire rush toward Baghdad, which caused dangerous gaps in refurbishment for U.S. troops, seems to have been based on the idea that after its seizure, Saddam's regime will be dismantled and the war will end in victory.

This simplistic calculation assumes brisk and decisive reaction from pro-coalition Iraqis. But as I have argued in this column, this is not happening. Thus, it was logical for the United States to change its military tactics and adapt to the unexpected situation on the ground, delay of the troops' advance, regaining control of provision routes and the reinforcing troops' presence in the front.

Meanwhile, in the northern part of the country, successful skirmishes dug out militants of Ansar al-Islam, an Islamic terrorist group that operates in northeastern Iraq and is accused by the White House to be a link between bin Laden and Saddam. U.S. officials are preparing their public to believe the fall of Baghdad means the capture of Saddam and the end of the war. The attention of the media and public is concentrated on the battle for Baghdad. Everyone is expecting a resistance but, finally a defeat of Saddam's elite corps, the Republican Guard. That is just perfect, but military and policy planners have made many mistakes and miscalculations so far. And I would like to reveal some possible scenarios that might devalue the actual fall of Baghdad.

A wily master of underground schemes, Saddam would have been mad to stay in Baghdad and wait for coalition troops to nab him. I don't see any reason for Saddam to be actually in Baghdad. The majority of his key institutions are in ruins, and communication facilities have been disabled. This reality makes control of the situation from a fortified bunker impossible.

Also, after living a lifetime in the trenches of military and political struggle, Saddam does not seem to be the one intending to surrender. It is likely he is actually out of Baghdad, trying to keep in touch with his officials through loyal couriers and trying to organize resistance according to new conditions created. His presence on the ground will undermine any puppet government's effort to establish control of the country.

An entrance of coalition troops in Baghdad will be accompanied with some negative factors. First, the coalition's military presence in Baghdad might increase the likelihood of what commanders seem to fear: civilian casualties. Second, the U.S. responsibilities to feed and curate civilians will be more direct, which will spawn a troublesome burden taking into consideration the mutual mistrust between the coalition's personnel and Iraqis. Third, the coalition's soldiers will be more vulnerable to guerrilla and urban warfare by Fedayeen or guardsmen masquerading as civilians. Fourth, the coalition's troops will be more exposed to suicide strikes that might breed unpredictable psychological problems.

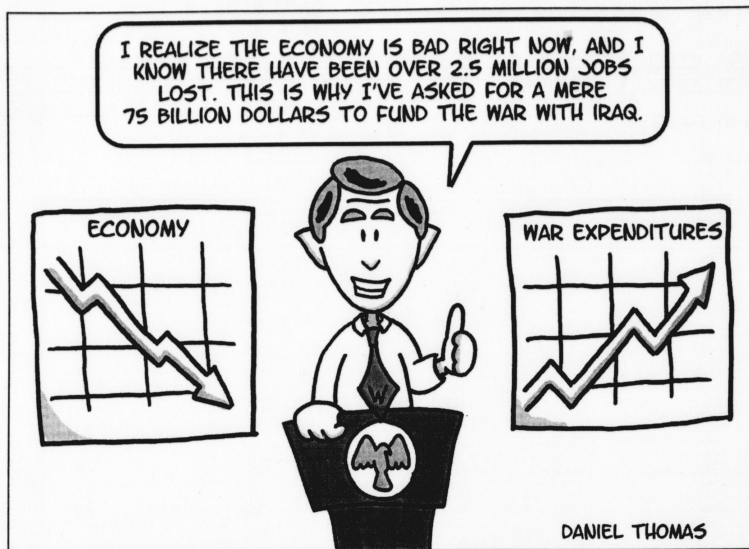

Unlike the Afghan campaign, the coalition forces have yet to be supported by local fighters, but they have been supported by Kurds, Kurds and Americans share common tactical interests but have different strategic aims. The coalition cannot rely on them to hunt Saddam out of the Kurdish-controlled zone. Investing heavily and solely in military action and circumventing efforts to encourage an indigenous military opposition to Saddam's regime would leave the coalition isolated and besieged by a hostile environment.

This makes the assault on Baghdad less important. It urges the United States to start paying more attention to indigenous political allies to establish control of the country. The U.S. public, mistakenly prepared for a short and harmless campaign, is showing the first signs of losing patience. And not because of the war's duration so far (two weeks is insignificant against a power like Iraq), but because of the unexpected Iraqi reaction.

President Bush's (un)limited and (un)realistic aim, illustrated in his "No solution but victory" declaration, remains a vague task in light of these conditions. Many questions exist about what the United States considers a victory and what the dimensions of this victory will be. How long will it take to ensure victory? How will victory be sustained? Who will manage this victory?

While the military operation has been revealed, a fog remains over any political action. Bush rejected any political solution that includes Saddam, but this does not mean the United States would reject every political solution that will be an added value toward the victory. U.S. history teaches us that victory belongs to the United States only when its decision makers combine political solutions with military force. The Afghan campaign, which for me has been a perfect war waged by the United States, might serve as the last and best example for this argument.

IN OUR OPINION

Housing solution needed

With UK's lease of the entire University Commons apartment complex for the 2003-04 academic year, new questions have arisen, dealing not only with the logistics of the new lease, but also with the dire straits student housing seems to be in.

At first glance, the housing arrangement seems beneficial to UK students, and it is. Residents living at the Commons will no longer be burdened with utility bills of any sort, and the proposed rate is cheaper than current lease rates at University Commons when utilities are factored in.

Yet UK officials seemingly failed to realize that current residents of the Commons do not only include UK students, but also students from other local universities and even non-students.

Already, several local apartment complexes are full for the fall semester, leaving those who want to — or must — leave the Commons will be forced to seek out new apartments where their leases could be considerably higher in some cases.

UK housing regulations also present an interesting question. With University Commons entirely under control of UK, how will the university enforce its alcohol and visitation policies in such a sprawling complex? There is no question that the area should be wet, since it lies entirely off campus.

Another pressing issue for current and future residents of University Commons is the bus system. Since the Commons will be UK housing, campus transportation services should reevaluate its routes so that it can provide more frequent shuttles to and from campus, as is done with the Greg Page and Shawneetown apartments.

The firm UK hired to plan the future of the university, Ayers Saint Gross, noted that a lack of parking and too many cars on campus was one of UK's biggest problems. Housing students off-campus without reliable busing won't solve this problem.

UK will need to analyze its new relationship with the Commons complex in the coming months, so that current and future residents can know what to expect and make their housing arrangements.

What this eventually boils down to is the gross lack of housing on campus. If administrators want to continually bring in larger classes every year — which is required to reach top 20 public research university status — they should ensure that there are adequate numbers of living quarters for those students. Plans to build a new dorm on south campus are existent, but one is not enough. Students should not be forced to live miles away from campus; it cheats them of a full college experience.

Don't apologize for being American

Nearly two full weeks into Persian Gulf War II, the anti-war Leftists are going crazy. They simply can't believe that their protests have not done one bit of good, and they're getting more and more desperate to keep their hatred of America in the newspapers.

Wes Blevins
 KERNEL COLUMNIST

As we all know, desperate people will do and say desperate things, and these pathetic folks are certainly no exception. Take, for example, Nicholas De Genova, an assistant professor of anthropology at Columbia. At an anti-war "teach-in," De Genova called for the massacre of American troops in Iraq and praised those Iraqi soldiers who would do the deed.

He said that in Iraq, he would like to see "a million Mogadishus," in reference to the 1993 ambush of American soldiers in Somalia, in which 18 were killed. What really fired his crowd up was his assertion that "we have to believe in the victory of the Iraqi people and the defeat of the U.S. war machine."

Obviously, De Genova is entitled to hold and express his beliefs. That is one of the rights he enjoys as a citizen of this nation that he hates so much. Yet it is clear that De Genova is a despicable man who should immediately be fired from his prestigious position at Columbia.

De Genova's case is just one of thousands of hate-filled messages that have been expressed over the past two weeks and beyond.

At a San Francisco "peace" rally, several idiots held a sign that read, "We support our troops — when they shoot their officers." Things like this do absolutely nothing to win over potential support for the anti-war cause. Instead, it serves only to inflame intense passions against these pitiful wastes of human space. Perhaps that's for the best.

Though not nearly as bad as the hate-filled messages being spewed out by some members of the anti-war movement, the political correctness of the past two weeks has been almost sickening.

At Muskingum College in New Concord, Ohio, a group of students was not permitted to hang U.S. flags on a school building, because they might hurt the feelings of anti-war students. Please pass the tissues.

In Tucson, Ariz., the mayor was hesitant to paint the letter "A" on a mountaintop outside of town red, white and blue, because it might be seen as a statement in favor of the war. Evidently, there is something wrong with supporting your nation in a time of war. That's news to me.

The Pentagon is advising Americans sending care packages to troops in the Persian Gulf not to send pork, because it might offend Muslims in the region.

It also asks persons not to send pornographic materials, political propaganda or "religious materials contrary to Islam." Does this mean that a Christian or Jewish soldier cannot carry a copy of the Bible or the Torah with him into battle, where he might most want to consult the spiritual teachings of his particular faith?

This political correctness is not as distant as it may seem.

At Asbury Theological Seminary, a display consisting of flags of the member nations of the coalition was removed from the cafeteria out of fears that it might anger or offend students from other nations or students who oppose the war.

The time has come for Americans to stop apologizing for being Americans.

The very fact that people come to the United States from nations such as Iraq should tell us all something. Perhaps America has something to offer that these nations do not have.

Our freedoms and our wealth draw people from every nation to our shores. To these people, freedom is a beautiful thing that is so valuable that they will leave everything behind just for a chance to live in the United States.

It is this very freedom that our ancestors fought and died to protect, and ironically, it is that same freedom that many of the protesters seem to hate so much. They could learn much from someone who escaped a repressive and brutal regime to live in the comfort and freedom of the United States.

WORLD'S GREATEST Gourmet Sandwiches

THE MEAT REASON

WE LOVE MEATS. THAT'S WHY WE SERVE ONLY 100% REAL LEAN. QUALITY MEATS - NEVER THAT CRUNKED AND PRESSED STUFF. AFTER ALL, YOU DON'T CHUNK AND PRESS THE THINGS YOU LOVE.
