Germany Must Be Mentally Disarmed van Walt Declares

German People Must Be Dominated, He Asserts

Germany must be disarmed mentally as well as materially, Dr. Harry van Walt told University students and staff members at convocation Tuesday.

There is no royal and peaceful road to this disarmament, he said, for the mind of the German is the result of age-old training in domination. The man of the house's word is law, and each boy asserts himself when he sets up a home in order to gain a feeling of superiority, which he never felt in his childhood.

The German people must be completely dominated, said Dr. van Walt, for they have only contempt for any other treatment. He said that while the treaty with Germany was being drawn up during the last war, Prussian leaders and militarists were plotting a second World War. Thus, the only hope of leading Germany is through power on the part of the Allied nations themselves, he declared.

The greatest danger which may come out of this war is a psychological upheaval which would be apparent in a reversion to intense nationalism or isolationism, and this must not happen, he said.

Dr. van Walt, born in the Netherlands and from Holland when his Germans invaded his country in 1940, has his anti-Nazi sentiments well known. In the United States he has continued his lectures which previously had taken him through most of the countries of Europe.

Dr. Leo M. Chamberlain, dean of the University, presided at convocation. Dr. Charles L. Pyatt, dean of the College of the Bible, gave the invocation and pronounced the benediction, and Perry Parrigan, junior in the department of music, played the organ prelude and postlude.

Bluegrass To Be Portrayed In Musical Comedy Soon

By Adele Denman

You're likely to find everything from Colons and mint juleps to horses and blue grass in Mrs. Denzil Hollingsworth's new musical comedy, "Out of the Blue," which will be given during the week of August 13 at the Guignol theatre.

This humorous, yet sentimental portrait of Kentucky is purely a product of local talent. It is written by a Lexington resident with songs by Maury Madison of Winchester, and directed by Wallace Briggs of the University under the sponsorship of the American Legion.

The play was written for the musical selections of Mr. Madison, whose music was introduced in France before the war by the famous Dali sisters. Though handicapped by blindness, the composer has written numerous songs, seven of which will be introduced in the play.

The plot deals with an actress, an actor, and a composer down on funds, who come to visit an owner of a Kentucky horse farm, only to find that the man's house has been sold to an old friend they met in show business.

The friend's wife returns after they have been there a time, and the Negro maid leads her to believe that her guests are royalty. By a twist of circumstances the guests are forced to pretend that they are. The scenes that follow are packed with a hilarious series of incidents, until the happy ending where the composer sells some songs and the guests return to New York.

Highlights of the performance are likely to be the excellent singing of Lucile Little, former student of Frank La Forge, well-known teacher of Lawrence Tibbit, and the character part of the Colonel, as interpreted by Jewell Doyle. Margaret McCorkle's black-face act where she sings "A Dish of Dixie," a musical receipt for making the South, is outstanding comedy. Other cast members are Ed Mills, Johnny Henfro, Robert Wright, Evelyn Bennett, Larry Snedegar, and Jessie Sun. Henry Foushee is the technical director and Nancy Skeen is in charge of interiors.

The music is excellent, and the songs themselves should make the play well worth seeing.

Tickets for the performance are $1.50 and the proceeds will go for the rehabilitation of returning veterans.

Sgt. Holland Returns

Staff Sergeant Karl Miller Holland, son of Mr. and Mrs. Miller Holland, Owensboro, has returned to the United States after 38 months in the Pacific. He will be in this country for a 45-day furlough before returning to the Pacific.

Sgt. Holland would have graduated from the College of Law in 1942, but he enlisted before graduation. He is a member of Delta Chi fraternity.

Mr. and Mrs. Holland are both members of the University class of 1908.

Former Young French Spy Will Discuss Non-Fraternization Policy On Round-Table

By Casey Goman

"Yes, you may call me a spy," Mlle. Sabine Donatienne Patrice Wormser, daughter of a Paris banker, said. Mlle. Wormser, in America on a speaking tour for American Relief for France, Incorporated, will be a member of the panel discussing the non-fraternization policy on the University round-table over WHAS Sunday at noon.

Mlle. Wormser told how, in 1939, she was in Brittany when the Germans moved in. The inhabitants of the village couldn't do anything without official permission, and no news of the outer world filtered in to the anxious inhabitants. Finally she received a travel permit and went to Nice, in the south of France.

There she began her activities with the French underground. From 1939 until the end of the war she worked at various tasks, which included drafting plans of military placements, drawing maps and replicas of German military insignia to be sent to England for the purpose of identification of troops.

She sat at her window, knitting, and counted the carloads of German troops going by, and also the movement of supplies on the railroads. She maintained some connection with the French maquis.

In speaking of the living conditions in an occupied country, Miss Wormser said that she is considered lucky—she had a hot bath upon reaching England. Many of the French have not known such a luxury since the beginning of the war in 1939, she stated.

Miss Wormser carries with her copies of several underground newspapers printed and distributed during the years of preparation for in-

Plans Are Being Made To House Women Students

Six Former Students Die

Word has been received from the Kentucky Center of War Information and Training of the death of six former University students serving in the U. S. Army.

Official word has been received by Mrs. H. P. Moffett that her son, Marine Lt. Albert W. Moffett, 26, a former University student, lost his life when a Japanese prison ship was torpedoed December 31, 1944, somewhere in the Pacific.

Lt. Moffett, who was taken prisoner by the Japanese at the fall of Corregidor, was reported missing after the Corregidor action, and was later reported a prisoner of war.

He entered the Marine Corps as a second lieutenant upon graduation from the University in 1939. After training in the United States, he went overseas in 1940 with the Fourth Marine Division and served in Shanghai, China, before he was ordered to the Pacific theater.

At the University Lt. Moffett majored in military science; was president of Kappa Alpha fraternity; captain of Scabbard and Blade; lieutenant of Pershing Rifles; and cadet colonel of the University ROTC unit.

Capt. Robert S. Sauer of Louisville, who graduated from the University in 1927, was killed in action on July 10, 1942 in the Pacific area. He was previously reported missing.

First Lt. George Alger Van Arsdall of Harrodsburg, who attended the University in 1935-36 is reported to have been killed when the Japanese prisoner-of-war ship in which he was being transported was sunk in Subic Bay. Lt. Van Arsdall was a student in the College of Engineering.

Lt. Colonel Nat. C. Cureton, Jr. of Louisville, a student at the University in 1916-17 was killed in action on June 20, in China.

AST's, ASTRP's Arrive

A new group of soldiers has arrived on the University campus. There are 106 in the group which includes 99 ASTRP's and 7 AST's. The new men will be housed in the men's dormitories and their classes will begin Monday.

Reservations Surpass Available Rooms

Plans are being made by the office of the dean of women to accommodate the enlarged enrollment of women expected at the University in September.

As of August 1, over 600 applications for living quarters had been received, exclusive of the rooms in nine sorority houses and the two cooperative units. Dormitory space for 561 girls is available, Mrs. Holmes said.

In the dormitories all two-girl rooms will be doubled into 3-girl rooms. Thus, the halls will be fuller than they were last year.

All sorority houses have been filled to overflowing, and each group has been urged to fill every available space in the respective houses.

The office of the dean expects to receive from five to ten applications a day for rooms for women from now until the middle of September.

Women students will be placed in rooms in private homes in parts of the city close enough to the University to provide easy commuting for the students. These homes must conform with certain standards set up by the Dean's office and the University. There must be a living room available for the girls to use

State Health Workshop Is Held On Campus

A 12-day Kentucky health education co-ordinator's workshop conference, which began Monday, is being held at the University.

Daily meetings are being held in the Agriculture building through August 10. These meetings will train the co-ordinators in methods of improving the teaching of health education, of using local, state and national resources effectively and securing community co-ordination.

The conference, conducted by state education and health departments, is being attended by representatives of 13 counties and is part of experimental work in health education being carried on under a grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle, Creek, Mich., in an effort to develop health-education projects in all Kentucky counties.

These incite rebellion, and keep the people inflamed against the Germans, yes, but they also review the newest in good literature, and they kept alive the culture of the people. The underground presses published books, too—among them was John Steinbeck's "The Moon is Down," printed in translation.

Miss Wormser graduated in philosophy from the Sorbonne in 1939, when she was 19 years old.

After the liberation of France she enlisted in the Corps Auxiliaire Volontaire Feminin, and was placed in charge of German women prisoners in Paris in September, 1944. She spoke on the underground movement at American air bases in England in November, 1944. She is now on a special mission for the Ministry of Information.

Former University Students Meet On Tinian Island

Fellow students who are now serving in the Armed Forces have not forgotten the University nor the friends they made while here, according to the following letter received recently from a former student. A picture received of a group of former students who gathered together on an island in the Pacific is presented on the first page of this edition.

Editor, Kentucky Kernel
University of Kentucky
Lexington, Kentucky
(God's Country)
Dear Editor,

Several years ago men at the University of Kentucky would never have gathered together to talk of old times spent on an island in the Pacific, but a few nights ago sixteen former students did get together here and happily reminisce of days at the old school in Lexington.

There was no way of knowing just how many U. of K. men were on this rock, but there was one way to find out. I put an announcement in our island daily bulletin calling all old students to a party, and asking those who read it and planned to attend to phone me. It wasn't long before the calls came, backed by plenty of enthusiasm. The plans were made, and the date eagerly awaited (Dr. Charles Kirk, Owensboro, showed up five days early looking for the party).

Well, a party, rally, reunion, get-together, or whatever you wish to call it, is difficult to describe; but if you visualize a meeting of men hungry for news from home and filled with memories of the past, men who are and have been thousands of miles from the things they love for a long period of time, you can understand the enjoyable time had by everyone present. Suffice it to say that many days gone by were lived once again.

There are more than sixteen U. of K. men here—several were unable to attend; two were dropping bombs from a B-29 on the Japanese home island at the time of our party. Those that missed being there will have another opportunity though, for we plan to meet every month or so.

The enclosed two pictures were taken for us by one of Major Robert Hensley's men, who printed a copy of both for everyone; and incidentally, since the pictures were made, Henry Young, Frankfort, and Richard Farmer, Lexington, have both received their captaincies.

Guess that is all this time; keep the University in good shape, because one of these days we'll be back.

Sincerely,

for entertaining, there must be no men in residence except the members of the immediate family, single beds are preferred, if at all possible, there must be adequate study space available for the girls, and the woman of the house must have a definite sense of responsibility toward the girls and the University. All girls thus housed are under jurisdiction of the school at all times.

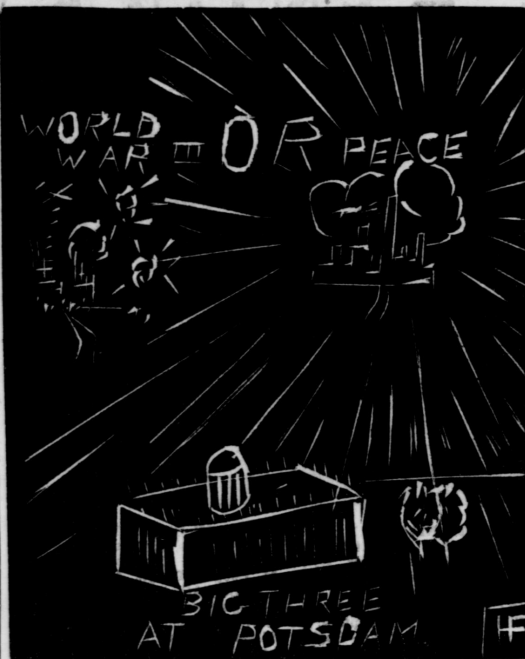

The regular evening Chat and Nibble hour in the dormitories will be resumed, Dean Holmes said, although there will not be the variety of former years in the fare served the girls. It will provide an evening snack to the girls, however, without the necessity of their going out late at night.

All applications received prior to August 1 will be placed in residence, and all applications received after that time will be placed in supervised houses.

YWCA, YMCA Meet

The joint meeting of the YMCA and YWCA will be held at 6:15 p.m. Tuesday on the balcony of the Union building, according to Bart Peak, YMCA secretary. New AST's and ASTRP's are especially urged to attend, Mr. Peak says.

The Salt Shaker

By Billie Fischer

The airplane-Empire State building catastrophe was most distressing. When someone broke the news to us, we burst into tears. But it so happened that we were reading an exceedingly depressing Russian novel at the time, and we probably would have bawled if someone had told us that our slip was showing.

It is interesting to note that the bomber which flew into the E.S.B. was flying down Fifth Avenue, just before the crash, at such a low altitude that pedestrians shouted warnings to it to climb.

From this strange event comes this week's brilliant quotation. Quoth Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, in reference to the accident, "Low flying, low flying." And, undoubtedly, a "tch-tch."

Have the campus cops caught you sitting on the grass talking to someone? Worse still, have they caught you holding hands or (we hesitate to say this) looking into someone's eyes? If so, aren't you ashamed? One would think that you thought that you were old enough to behave yourselves without supervision! Really! If you want to be alone, there are so many places where you could go. There's the bus station and the Union station for talking and, if you want to hold hands, by all means, go to city parks, or secluded alleys. But don't use the campus, please. It isn't nice. . . . Will the campus cops pardon us while we say POOH!

We've been having a high old time releasing suppressed desires. What we mean is that we haven't been suppressing them this week. We just wanted to see what would happen if we followed through each impulse that ran through our nasty little mind. It's lots of fun—try it yourself. We find ourself speaking to all kinds of strange people, pinching babies to make them cry, ducking people in the pool, eating six or seven meals a day, telling the truth, sleeping in classes (although we never did suppress that desire), swimming in the rain, and all sorts of things. Of course, some people may not enter into the fun with you. One of our friends actually grew indignant when we tried to put out a cigarette in her ear.

We were discussing the era of silent movies with Dr. Brady the other day—the era in which slides were flashed across the screen during the show—slides reading "Please don't spit on the floor. Remember the Johnstown flood!" and such. Dr. B. told us about a certain movie in which the hero lay dying on the floor and the heroine rushed to him. She gathered his head to her bosom, and then, turning to the audience with a tear-stained face, she dropped his head in despair. She dropped it so hard that it bounced. The caption following that scene was a string of tender endearments from the lips of the dying, but Dr. B. says that you didn't have to be a lip-reader to see that the actor's words had been, "You goldang fool!" or words to that effect.

Sur-Meis-ing

By Shirley Meister

If you haven't already noticed, this is election week in Kentucky, and you can hardly walk down the campus without someone asking you to either electioneer or vote for their best friend. The thing to do of course, is listen to them, expound on the superior qualities of the candidate, and then inform them that you're under 21, but if the candidate is running next time, you'd be very glad to vote for him. We thought we had heard everything until one candidate asked people to vote for him because his son was in the Army. No doubt this makes him an authority on civilian and Army matters.

At convocation Tuesday, Dr. van Walt said that one of the solutions for a better Germany was to give women equal rights and to let them have a hand in the German government. Afterwards, a student said that that couldn't possibly work because women are natural talkers and that would be taking a chance on having a woman dictator. Yes, it was a "he" student.

Things we liked on the campus this week: the expression on some of the senior girls' faces when they heard the new soldiers were to be 17-year-old ASTRP's; one of the profs taking pictures of the leaving 6th termers; and Dorcas Hollingsworth's Crosley car being stared at, as it dodged campus traffic.

We really took ourselves out of this world this week when we took a typhoid shot. We thought there was nothing to it until the nurse aimed that needle at us and told us not to worry if our arm changed its appearance. We thought she was kidding until the next day when we noticed our prof hopping up and down while the room was going around and around. We just sat there until the bell rang and as we slowly crawled down the steps on all fours one of our classmates said, "Just wait until you have your second and third shots, and you won't even need those steps." So if you want to get away from it all without that "unnecessary trip" just walk over to the dispensary and ask for some typhoid shots. You'll be s-o-r-r-y!

In one of the journalism classes the prof asked the class which of these two headlines would appeal to the public's eye, "the art of kissing" or "the art of courting." One of the students promptly replied, "Well, it seems to me that they're about neck and neck."

Dr. Allen Identifies Species Of Jellyfish

Dr. W. R. Allen of the University zoology department who is an authority on the various kinds of fish, has identified a species found recently in the Kentucky river.

The species was identified as fresh water jellyfish which grow large enough to be seen. The fish are usually quite small and have appeared only this year on the surface large enough to be noticed.

Language To Be Taught
'Army Style' On Campus

By Betty Anne Ginochio

Imagine being able to speak a foreign language with real fluency at the end of two quarters' study and after little or no homework at that! Well, just such a student dream is being turned into reality during summer school by Dr. Hobart Ryland, head of the University's Department of Romance Languages.

In June, 1943, Dr. Ryland entered the Army and, as a major, taught French to sophomore cadets at West Point. It was here, through his associates, that he learned of the revolutionary new system of language instruction. The new method, called the Army System, is employed extensively in Army schools throughout the country, but paradoxically enough, it was not the one used at the military academy. Nevertheless, Dr. Ryland had an opportunity to observe the Army System in actual operation and was impressed with the results. He received an honorable discharge from the Army and, returning to the University in April of this year, wasted no time in collaborating with Dr. Alberta Wilson Server on plans to install the program experimentally in the summer term.

The original Army System requires a longer period of study per day than that formulated by Dr. Ryland and Dr. Server, but the fundamental learning theory remains the same. This theory promotes the idea that a sentence vocabulary is more desirable than the traditional single word vocabulary. In other words, an isolated foreign word is of no use unless coupled with other words to form phrases, and the new system stresses the learning of phrases outright, minus the traditional routine of memorizing each word separately. By continual drill on selected sentences, grammar becomes automatic, and hence no formal study of grammar—heretofore the fly in the student's linguistic ointment—is necessary. Classroom procedure, as formulated by Dr. Ryland for French classes and, in collaboration with Dr. Server, for Spanish classes, involves the daily study of verbs, vocabulary, and sentences.

For example, let's take one of the beginning lessons in French. A few simple verbs and words are discussed, but the major portion of the period is spent in sentence work. The teacher reads a sentence in French to the students who, still looking at it, repeat the French until pronunciation is perfect. Then the book is closed, the teacher reads the sentence in English, and the class translates it into French. The teacher repeats the sentence in French and the class translates it into English; then it's written on the board—in short, these basic sentences become a working part of a student's knowledge. As lessons progress, he can add new meanings to these sentences by the addition or substitution of words encountered in new vocabularies and sentences.

Beginning French and Spanish classes, now using this method, meet six days a week, but Dr. Ryland hopes in the fall to have nine periods per week for five hours credit, balancing the additional number of hours by the prospect of little or no homework. Eventually he hopes to obtain a Frenchman and a South American to take over four of the nine hours of instruction, thereby giving the students close contact with someone to whom the language they are studying is a native tongue.

As now proposed, the first and second quarter's work will be primarily sentence drill, the third and fourth quarters will consist of reading with more intensive study of grammar based on sentences, and the fifth quarter will consist of conversation, reading, and perhaps a survey of literature in the particular tongue. By the end of the fourth quarter, or even the second, students will have a working conversational knowledge of the language they are studying, as well as a reading ability in it, Dr. Ryland said. Lacking a textbook in this method, Dr. Ryland and Dr. Server are using daily lesson sheets which they have prepared and which will soon be published as probably the first textbooks written for the new technique.

It's a practical theory, this method of Dr. Ryland's, looking toward a future where nations grown closer together will of necessity need to know the fundamental tool of understanding one another—the spoken language.

The Lowe-Down

By Dick Lowe

The University of Kentucky gridders have put their uniforms back in the moth balls until September 1, the probable date that fall football practice will begin.

Coach Bernie Shively shut down the steam factory a week after the Blue-White game and told the boys that the rest of the summer was theirs to do with as they pleased. The only exception to the rule was for them to return in the fall in good shape and ready to whip the pants off all competition.

Most of the boys hit out the next day for home, just to relax in the sun and eat their mother's good food. But as usual there were a few with a thirst for knowledge who remained to clutter up the class rooms and dream about the coming victories in the fall. The only casualty on the campus is Hobie Thomas but he has thrown away his crutches and will walk as straight as ever in a few days.

The Blue-White game was somewhat of a disappointment to many. They figured that the spectacular plays were too few and the two teams played in the middle of the field too much. But I will wager that most of them never realized that the heat was terrific, especially with all of the gear that a football player wears for protection. The reason for most of the play in the middle of the field is easily explained; both teams knew each other's plays and naturally were able to stop them. The hot weather was too much for some of the big boys and it took about three days for Hugh Shannon to pick up the 11 pounds that he lost that night.

After a two-year absence, the Vanderbilt University Commodores will return to Southeastern competition. The Wildcats are scheduled to play the Commodores. According to Coach Doby Bartling, however, the Cats may not have too much to worry about as the Commodores have a light line and backfield. He said that the average weight of the team will not exceed that of a pre-war prep school team. The Wildcats boast of a better than 200-pound line and the reserves will not lighten it but by a few pounds.

Coach Adolph Rupp has all smiles the other day and it is months until basketball season. But any coach who could boast of having two of the outstanding high school basketball players in the state signed up for the coming season should be happy. Harlan's Wallace Jones and Louisville's Ralph Beard have given their word to Coach Rupp that they will do their college playing at the University and will report for practice when the fall quarter begins. Jones compiled the best national scoring record for a high school player while playing for Harlan. Both were members of the All-Kentucky State basketball team last fall. Beard will play football in the fall but Jones, who is as good on the gridiron as he is on the court, has not stated his football intentions as yet.

Beard is the fourth Louisville freshman to join the University football forces. Others, all from Manual, are Babe Ray, Hal Phillips and Hal Taylor. All are backs but play different positions.

Jim Little, captain of the 1944 Kentucky football team, signed a contract to play professional football with the New York Giants. Little is 23 years old and weighs 205 pounds. Since his graduation from UK, he has been a student at the Candler School of Theology at Emory University.

He began his collegiate football career at Eastern State Teachers college and then entered the University of Kentucky in the fall of 1944. He was captain and regular running mate to All Southeastern Conference Tackle Wash Serini until he suffered a leg injury late in the season.

Debate To Be Followed Up

A discussion on the subject of the proposed revision of the Commonwealth of Kentucky's present constitution became emphatic during the debate Monday evening in Memorial hall, when Eli Brown III and Judge E. C. O'Rear argued the proposition, "The Present Constitution of Kentucky is Inadequate."

One of the most marked and faulty features of the present constitution, in Mr. Brown's opinion for the affirmative, was the distrust shown to the legislature in the constitution of Kentucky. Many sections of the document were cited by the affirmative speaker to uphold his statement. He also pointed out limitations on the executive powers, local administration and the limitations on the educational salaries and employees of the state as bad features of the constitution. Sections limiting public printing and the prohibition against submission to the people at any one time of more than two amendments also were cited.

Mr. Brown asserted in conclusion, "Thus we can see what we need, is a re-examination of basic fundamental principles of organic law. If what we have has acted as a drag, as a bar or as a deterrent to the people of this state to attain that high estate we once occupied, then it should be changed and changed quickly. Whether this change be by convention or by amendment is not important, but what is of paramount importance is that by discussion, by study and by comparison, the people can change their constitution or decline it as suits their sovereign will."

Judge O'Rear, in speaking for the negative proposition, spoke in defense of the present constitution. He stated that the document was drawn up to protect the people from idealisms which supported the divine right of kings and dictatorships. "Power feeds upon power and must be restrained in the government, but at the same time allow the government to operate effectively," he said.

Kentucky's needs and grievances can be met by amendments passed two at a time in Judge O'Rear's opinion, as long as they were carefully studied and constructed. There is no need to tear down the entire framework of the 1891 constitution to bring about desired changes, he concluded.

Dr. Thomas D. Clark, head of the University history department, presided at the debate, and announced that in a subsequent debate the opponents will answer each other's arguments.

The debate was carried by local and state radio stations.
