Paul K. left UK and a debate scholarship behind to pursue the rock 'n' roll experience.

"People have gotta start thinking differently about recorded music. There's a real mythology to dises. When we were little, there were 4s and you could stack 'em on the changer and they were cheap. But all that's changed. We have no illusions about trying to reach a mass audience, or having a hit, even though some of our songs are kind of pop."

K's rejection of established mod-ern recording industry techniques is based on his belief that modern rock music, as a genre, is bankrupt. He finds the primitive four-track re-cording process The Johnsons uses to be at least adequate and even a process that allows the band more creative freedom.

A lyric from his song "The Lottery," illustrates: Both of us are starving lonely, nothing seems absurd, your prophecies have some familiar ring, my stomach screams so loud that I con't understand the words, and I can't swallow, but I can still sing.

"The only important thing is to have what you call soul. That's our only real long-term goal: to some-day have soul."

Black Student Union supports minority affairs with carnival

By C.A. DUANE BONIFER Contributing Writer

When you are one of 650 students on a campus of more than 23,000, it can be a little intimidating. That was the situation for a black UK student during the 1985-86 school year.
This year, the Black Student Union is trying to change that situation by making the black students on campus more aware of the programs and activities designed to make them feel more like a member of a group, rather than just a number.

Last night, the BSU held the first annual Minority Students Carnival in the Student Center courtyard.
According to Chester Grundy, director of minority student affair, the carnival was held to introduce students to the black community on

Originally, the BSU planned to have a picnic for the minority students, but members felt that a carnival, showcasing the various organizations, would be more effective.

"It's great," said Terri Kemp, a political science freshman. "We need these things so black people can get together."

Wright said she sees the role of a minority student on campus as a very active part of campus life.

"I think being a minority student, we have to work hard to prove to those who are prejudiced against us, that we can do it," she said. "Minority students need to be very active academically, socially and politically in both the campus and the community life."

"I think the Kernel should publish more things (concerning minority activities) that happen around campus, because there's a lot of things that happen around here that some blacks don't even know about," she said.

Members of the BSU hope that mi-nority students will become more in-volved with minority organizations and campus activities.

At the carnival, there was a black "If we can get one-half to two-gospel choir, a black jazz band and thirds (of the total minority stu-nitely be an annual thing."

Effects of transplant drug being tested

ATLANTA — A possible link between a new antiorgan-rejection drug given to kidney transplant patients and a type of meningitis is being investigated, federal health officials said yesterday.

The Centers for Disease Control reported that last month, soon after taking the drug, four patients at two lown hospitals developed signs of meningitis or inflamma.

Archaeologists unearth prehistoric floor

BEAR VALLEY, Calif — A prehistoric, man-made structure that could be the oldest ever found in North America has been unearthed by archaeologists in the Sierra Nevadas, 150 miles east of San Francisco.

Scientists think the Indian structure, a clay floor discovered the Stanislaus National Forest two weeks ago, is a least 10,000 years old.

A discovery at Hells Gap, Wyo., was previously thought to be the oldest man-made structure on the continent, dated at 8,000 years old.

The new find could affect scientific opinion about how long ago humans migrated to North America. Sites and structures tentatively dated up to 32,000 years old have been found in South America.

"If the date holds, then California man is much older than we've thought," said Rainer Berger, chairman of the archaeology department at the University of California at Los Angeles.
