THE WATER SITUATION

Students at the University during the present summer session are doubtfully impressed that the present water situation might be much improved. As a matter of actual fact, we are informed that the peculiar and somewhat unpleasant taste is not due to the presence of impurities of any kind but rather to the process of insuring pure water. At any rate, the authorities are doing all that they can to insure a supply of germ-free water to the city and University, and the administration is placing ice in most of the coolers so that the students will not suffer through lack of adequate drinking water.

While it is clear that the situation leaves much to be desired, we are more fortunate than many other sections of the state. There is no possibility for several months, even during an entire absence of rainfall, that Lexington will be short of water. With the present supply, and the measures that are being taken to keep the water pure, the dangers have been greatly minimized.

JOSEPHINE COLLEGE

For more years than we care to count we have been amused by the recorded exploits of one "Joe College," prototype of all college freshmen. During some several years we have been wondering if Joe doesn't have a little sister. We believe that there is a prototype of college freshman girl just as surely as there is an individual that is representative of all other college men.

Joe's chief claim to fame is his general lack of information. His sister, Josephine, is not well known for the information that she has at her command, but what she can hide gracefully. Joe professes ignorance of all his sister assumes a base cognizance of everything of importance.

Joe is at least original; he seeks originality in dress and ingenuity in conversation. Josephine seeks to conform to the masses, and her conversation is but a mimicking of her favorites. Joe may violate the University regulations, but he is willing to face his accusers. Josephine usually prevails on a sorority sister with influence to intervene for her with the greatly feared dean.

Joe develops his "line" unconsciously by his association with his fellows. The girl acquires hers through much deliberation and serious practice with her gentleman admirers. Joe has no particular desire except to get along with people and make the required standing to stay in college. Josephine sets her aim far higher. She not only wants to make friends, to maintain her standing, but also to acquire several bits of jewelry in the form of fraternity pins.

But after all we doubt if we would have her otherwise. If she could be depended upon to do the orthodox things consistently, there would not be any fun in trying to understand her. She's just a little of everything that is interesting and even a puzzle to herself. She doesn't know ahead of time what she will do in a given situation, and if she did, she would probably do something else. Such is life!

COLLEGE COMMENT

Nebraska State has a new ruling that no student may take part in any college activity until an official certificate of eligibility from the faculty eligibility committee has been filed with the officer in charge of the activity. What a good way that will be to dispense with a lot of purposeless orders that have no particular excuse for being and solicit their membership almost entirely from students who have nothing else to do.

A new course is being offered this summer for the first time in the history of Oklahoma State College on "How to Raise and Care for Children." We've always wondered why some such course couldn't be offered to teach people the responsibilities of matrimony. Entirely too many of the courses that we take in college are of little practical value. For the girls, at least, training in motherhood is something that should be of a great deal more practical value to them, than say, a course in charcoal drawing, when all the charcoal that they see after they leave school will be what they pull out of the heating stove!

Not more than 20 per cent of the 38,000 freshmen enrolling in 20 state institutions of higher learning last fall entered college with reading capabilities surpassing seventh grade students, according to J. W. Shephard, director of the department of education cooperation at the University of Oklahoma. We're not surprised that reading is becoming a lost art in view of some of the pedagogical methods that are being used on the poor, unsuspecting high school student. Not until requirements for high school teachers are raised to the standards of California and a few other states will the high school students be even fairly trained when they reach college.

Donations amounting to $120,000 were made to the University of Cincinnati recently. These gifts presented were the result of the generosity of widows of former students of the school.

LITERARY SECTION

DOROTHY CARR, Editor

FORGETFULNESS

Shall I go, and in some other air
Dig in a phantom earth with phantom spade
And all the memories of the world will fade
From less to less: I shall grow unaware
Of things that were most precious and most fair.
Till all the lovely ghosts of earth are laid:
I shall forget even the things you said—
I shall forget your eyes, your voice, your hair.

And in that twilight region where a year
May be a million ages or a day
Someone will come and whisper in my ear
A name I do not know, but, strangely stirred,
I shall arise, and muse awhile and say,
"Helen?—Helen?—I do not know the word."
* * * —ROBERT BELL

A SAILOR LOST TO THE SEA

Here was a earth-held men who should have been
A laughing pirate on a white-winged ship
His dreams were all of a wild adventuring
On far-off seas where only red moons slip
Across the bows or tangle in the spars.
He thought of gleaming sunsets over water,
Of golden dawns and black-teethed gales and stars,
And sea denied, yet secretly he sought her.

He was bound inland with his windy passion,
Enslaved at desks with fever in his eyes.
Pacing his floor at night he strove to fashion
The old remembrance of the sea gull cries.
And here he lies, as rooted as this tree,
Giving to earth what he could not give the sea.
—FRANCES M. FROST.

TRAGEDY

He wronged me; but quickly the pang of it
Perished.
For how should a wrong be remembered and cherished
When love is a compact too dear for the pledgers
To enter each debt in account-books and ledgers?

Though I would erase it, not asking a wherefore,
Embittered he feels that he wronged me; and therefore
No matter what winters my friend may out-
live me,
I know, to my grief, he will never forgive me!

Prof. A. E. Heath, of Cambridge University, urges lectures on love-making for the double purpose of making class room work more interesting while in school, and life more interesting as the students grow older. We wonder who could be secured to teach the fundamentals of a class of that kind. Oh, certainly, not our staid and dignified professor who would blush at the very thought!

interesting for the performance of Claudette Colbert who is one of my very few favorites.

The comedy team of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy is undoubtedly one of the screen's most popular attractions. Hal Roach, their producer, now has a full length feature picture prepared for them, according to a special bulletin. Title is "The Rap," and it was originally intended for a two-reeler but due to its satirical timeliness in kidding the current popularity of prison pictures, they decided to extend it.

And speaking of popularity you must mention William Haines, the mugg who got on my nerves so long that I began to like him. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has grossed heavily on Haines and now they release "Way Out West," which opens at the Ben All Sunday.

ing. Just a lot of good actors going to waste.

In spite of its creaky, old fashioned plot, "Romance," Greta Garbo's talker, clicked with me. The excellent direction of Clarence Brown, plus the histrionics of the Garbo, Lewis Stone, and Gavin Gordon, put the picture over. Be sure to see this at the Stand. Also "Her Private Affair" at the Ben All is worth a look for Ann Harding. Splendid little picture, in my opinion. For three consecutive weeks the Kentucky has its good productions of the last half of the week. "Crumpy," current, is rich entertainment. Today is the last time you'll have to catch it, but by all means do so.

Rachel Crothers wrote a play called "Let Us Be Gay," which had a tremendous run in New York last year. Burns Mantle selected it as one of the best of the season and Metro-Goldwyn Mayer bought the talking screen rights for Norma Shearer. The picture opens at the Strand Sunday. Aside from the star the cast includes Marie Dressler, Rod La Rocque, Gilbert Emery, Raymond Hackett, Hedda Hopper, and Sally Eilers. That is a strong line of names for you. Of course you saw and liked "The Divorcee," Norma's last appearance here. Robert Z. Leonard also directed "Let Us Be Gay," which, like its predecessor, relies upon drawing room smartness, stiches with human sympathy. The story tells of two divorced people who meet at a house party three years later. It is said that the ladies wear many gorgeous creations in the way of clothes which will please the fops and probably be a not revolting sight to some of their purple suited boy friends. However, "Let Us Be Gay," ought to be excellent entertainment, due to its clever dialogue, direction, and acting.

This ballyhoo about Westinghouse Week at the Kentucky is all right, I guess, but that doesn't make recompense for loading about twenty minutes of dull advertising copy, offering nothing but a Westinghouse plug in lieu of entertainment, off on the folks. And while we're talking of such practices, I should think that everyone knows that the Ben All and Strand theaters were given a plaque for good sound (which they probably deserve) but we have the trailers memorized by now and would rather depend upon our memory.

"Manslaughter" opens at the Kentucky tomorrow. This Paramount picture has Claudette Colbert, ever remembered for "Young Man of Manhattan," in the lead role with Frederic March in support. Perhaps you remember the silent, directed by Cecil B. DeMille for the same producers eight years ago with Thomas Meighan, then at his height, and Leatrice Joy. The theme concerns a young district attorney who is forced to send the woman he loves to prison for manslaughter. The crime was the unintentional killing of a motorcycle cop. It is reported that George Abbott, the director, has modernized the script in many ways in order that its drama would not impress one as being forced instead of natural. The plot is highly exciting at times and is said to contain not a few dramatic punches. "Manslaughter" will be

Recovers from Cuts

William Kleiser, University student and prominent athlete, has so recovered from his recent injuries that he is able to resume his work on the farm of James Sharpe, near Danville.
Mr. Kleiser was injured several weeks ago while on a swimming party near Booneboro when he was attacked. His attackers were indicted before the grand jury at Winchester and have been released on bond for trial early in September.
