ABOUT THE LIBRARIES

NETWORK NEWS

On May 24, 1979 a cataloging record entered into the OCLC data base by the University of Louisville received the system-assigned control number 5000000. As numbers approached the six-million milestone on February 19, 1980, a UK cataloger tried to duplicate the U of L's feat.

In the Cataloger's own words: "All afternoon new records were being added to the system at the leisurely rate of 4-7 per minute. But, when #5999900 was assigned around 5:30, there was an incalculably rapid surge of activity. I started calling records out of the SAVE area and SENDING as quickly as my panicked state allowed. I added 13 records in succession. (I had settled on a reserve of 13 deliberately, to defy the gods.) My first PRODUCE command, when I looked back a couple of minutes later, had already been too late: the record has been assigned #6000017. Close, but as Al McGuire remarked during a recent Sunday afternoon basketball telecast, 'close' counts only in horseshoes and hand grenades."

OCLC #6000000, by the way, is a bibliographic record for a book by John and Valerie Graves entitled Medical sound recording, and was input by the Upstate Medical Center in Syracuse, New York.

SEVEN PUBLISHERS SUE IN EFFORT TO HALT ILLEGAL COPYING

The use of photocopies instead of complete, original textbooks in college classrooms has prompted a concerted campaign by publishers for stricter enforcement of the federal copyright law.

With the backing of the Association of American Publishers seven publishing companies last week filed suit against a commercial photocopying business. The defendant is Gnomon Corporation of Cambridge, Mass., which operates photocopying stores near university campuses in Cambridge, Ithaca, N.Y., New Haven, and State College, Pa.

The publishers charge that material from their publications were copied without permission, in violation of the federal copyright law that took effect in 1978.

Alexander C. Hoffman, chairman of the publishers' association, said: "We believe the evidence in this case is overwhelming, clear-cut and unfortunately typical of a huge volume of illegal copying that goes on continually on campuses all over the country. Anthologies are put together consisting of substantial portions that are stolen not only from textbooks but also chapters from trade books and articles from journals. These copied 'anthologies' are used instead of the originals without permission or payment."

The copying involved at least an entire chapter or complete journal in every case, and in many cases a third to half of an entire book was photocopied. Most of the work was done for professors. Orders usually were for 20 to 30 copies, depending upon the number of students in the class.

I have friends — my books — whose society is extremely agreeable to me; they are of all ages, and of every country. They have distinguished themselves both in the cabinet and in the field, and obtained high honours for their knowledge of the sciences. It is easy to gain access to them; for they are always at my service, and I admit them to my company and dismiss them from it, whenever I please.
