

Breathitt Sworn In As Governor; Pledges More Progress For State

Executive's Record One Of Public Service

The following is from the official program for the inauguration of Edward T. "Ned" Breathitt as Governor. Since publication of the programs was started in 1943, such articles have been written by a Frankfort newspaperman, this one by the Courier-Journal's Allan M. Trout.

The new dimension of public service as a family heritage adds a measure of prideful distinction to the inauguration of Edward T. Breathitt Jr., as Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Pomp and pageantry of the occasion, of course, remain true to the traditions of 171 years of statehood. The winners celebrate, the losers congratulate. There are the shouts of exultation, the pantomimes of parade, the food a match for hearty appetites, the drink a complement to exuberant spirits, the music an inspiration for dancing feet.

But there hovers over this gala occasion of Dec. 10, 1963, an aura of historic public service by the family surnamed Breathitt that somehow connotes a state come of age. It plumbs a new depth to the democracy upon which our system rests. It calibrates new breadth to the politics that is catalytic agent to the process of self-government in a sovereign state of a free republic.

The contribution of this family to the commonwealth of Kentucky began in September, 1832, when John Breathitt was inaugurated Governor under Inauguration Elm on grounds of the Old Statehouse. He was the uncle many times removed, of the Gov. Breathitt now assuming office.

It was for the first Gov. Breathitt that Breathitt County was named. George Breathitt, his brother, was private secretary to President Andrew Jackson. These first Breathitts were Democrats.

But James Breathitt Sr., the incoming Governor's grandfather, was a Republican. As such, he was elected attorney general in 1907 and served 1907-11 in the Republican administration of Gov. Augustus E. Wilson.

Next in succession came the Democrat, James Breathitt Jr., uncle to the new Governor. He was elected lieutenant governor in 1927 and served 1927-31 in the administration headed by Gov. Flem D. Sampson, a Republican. This Breathitt was nominated for governor in the convention of 1931, but lost out to Gov. Ruby Laffoon.

Nor is the latest in line a neophyte in public service. Gov. Breathitt, 39 and a lawyer, has behind him three terms in the House of Representatives, service in the cabinet of Gov. Bert T. Combs, and on the bench of Public Service Commission. He long has been an articulate advocate of constitutional reform and a leader in civic affairs.

The public service of Harry Lee Waterfield, 52, the incoming lieutenant governor, is no less distinguished because it spans only the relatively brief time of his own generation. He has served six terms in the House of Representatives, two of them as Speaker. He was lieutenant governor in the administration of 1955-59, headed by Gov. Albert B. Chandler. He was defeated for governor in the Democratic primaries of 1947 and 1959. He has achieved noteworthy business success in the fields of farming, livestock, publishing, and insurance.

And so we have at this place and in this time the blending of

Lectures Scheduled This Week

Two more lectures are scheduled for this last week of formal classes and programs:

Today, Dr. H. Rawling Pratt-Thomas, president of the Medical College of South Carolina, will speak on "Experimental and Environmental Factors Bearing on Carcinoma of the Cervix." The lecture, sponsored by the Cancer Teaching Committee, will be at 8 p.m. in Room MN263 of the Medical Center.

Friday, Dr. Thomas D. Clark, chairman of the History Department, will be at the Faculty Club between 4 and 5 p.m., to describe his experiences in Washington following the assassination of President Kennedy. Dr. Clark's talk will concern an inside view of the government's reaction and adjustment to the national disaster at that time.

New Governor Pledges 'Better Opportunities'

By GARY HAWKSWORTH
Kernel Staff Writer

"A better opportunity for every Kentuckian to realize his full potential," was the keynote of Gov. Edward T. (Ned) Breathitt's inaugural address, yesterday.

The address was delivered to an estimated crowd of 50,000 people after a three hour parade celebrating the inauguration.

Gov. Breathitt dedicated his administration to the spirit of John F. Kennedy. He said that the martyred president had left as a heritage a spirit of concern for the individual, detachment from self, and a dedication to able leadership, and Gov. Breathitt said, "Let us today, undergo a humble baptism in that spirit."

Breathitt said his hope for a better opportunity was for all Kentuckians—city or country, rich or poor, black or white.

Education was the first topic of eminent concern that the governor alluded to. "Kentucky cannot afford to halt or slow down educational progress," he said.

Gov. Breathitt praised the educational progress made under the Combs administration, but reminded his audience that Kentucky still faced problems in educational development. "The sheer pressure of numbers is overwhelming," he said, "and we must also insure the growing quality of instruction."

Turning to the economy, Gov. Breathitt said the promise of 75,000 new jobs and a billion dollar economy were serious objectives of his administration.

He pointed to Eastern Kentucky as one of the great problem areas of the state. He reassured Kentucky that he was certain President Johnson would make the visit to Kentucky planned by John Kennedy in conjunction with the Appalachia Regional Development Commission, a federal program for the redevelopment ment of the southern Appalachian Mountain regions.

Gov. Breathitt's final promise was to watch carefully over the people's financial trust. He said he realized that every dollar mismanaged in Frankfort was a dollar that could not be used to improve education, roads, jobs, and welfare.

"You will get a dollars worth of service for every dollar spent," he promised, "or some heads will roll."

Experience is what Lt. Gov. Harry Lee Waterfield promised to bring to his office.

"I shall use my experience as a bridge," Lt. Gov. Waterfield said, "and I shall walk facing the future. In this manner only is there virtue in experience."

Lt. Gov. Waterfield took his first position in the state legislature in 1937, and is the second man to have held the office of lieutenant governor twice.

He said that he had enjoyed serving under most of the past governors represented at the inauguration. "I have supported them and I have opposed them according to my convictions," he said, "but I am a part of all the governors under whom I have served."

Taking a note from President Johnson's address to Congress, Lt. Gov. Waterfield concluded with, "I will do my best, that is all I can do, I ask your help and God's."

"Thank you for allowing me to be your governor," was the simple end with which retiring governor Bert Combs concluded his administration.

Noted Pianist, Commentator To Present Concert Tonight

Boris Goldovsky, noted pianist and music commentator, will present one of his "Piano Portraits" lecture recitals at the Coliseum tonight.

The concert, one in a series sponsored by the General Kentucky Concert and Lecture Association, will begin at 8:15 p.m.

Goldovsky presents his program through words and music, illustrating his lecture by playing the piano.

Some of his programs include "Romance of the Piano" covering the whole field of piano literature from Scarlatti to Bartok; "Invitation to the Waltz" featuring waltzes of Schubert, Weber, Liszt, and Ravel; and "An Evening with Chopin" including work from the four facets of Chopin—Chopin the Lover, Chopin the Virtuoso, Chopin the Poet, and Chopin the Patriot.

Goldovsky also gives programs based on explanations and excerpts from famous operas.

Goldovsky was the master of ceremonies of the Metropolitan Opera News of the Air program. He won the Peabody Award for Outstanding Contributions to Radio Music.

The former director of the New England Opera Theater, Goldovsky is the author of "Accents on Opera."

Goldovsky made his debut as a performing artist with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra at the age of 13. He came to the United States in 1930.

Born in Moscow, Goldovsky is the son of a violinist. He received his first instruction in piano from Pierre Luboshutz, his uncle and a noted pianist.

Fleeing the Russian revolution of 1917 the family fled to Germany where Boris continued his studies under Artur Schnabel.

After his debut with the Berlin

Philharmonic he studied composition and conducting at the Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. Later he took general courses at the Sorbonne in Paris.

In America he studied conducting under Fritz Reiner at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. His mother was already a faculty member at the institute.

Goldovsky served as the head of the opera department of the Cleveland Institute of Music. He resigned this post to become an instructor at the New England Conservatory and the Longy School of Music.

He developed an interest in opera in 1933 when he was asked to play for an opera workshop class conducted by German stage director Ernst Lert.

Married to an opera singer, the former Margaret Codd, Goldovsky lives in Massachusetts. He has two children, Michael and Marina.

To Perform Tonight

Boris Goldovsky will present a lecture recital at the Coliseum at 8:15 tonight as a part of the Central Kentucky Concert and Lecture Series. The performer is a noted pianist and music commentator.

New Atlas Published By Geologists

A new atlas showing the availability of ground water in eight south-central Kentucky counties has been published by the United States Geological Survey.

Dr. Wallace W. Hagan, state geologist and director of the Kentucky Geological Survey, says the map is being issued as part of a statewide water resources study conducted jointly by the state and federal governments. With publication of the atlas, the state now is completely covered by ground water availability maps.

Future work will involve more detailed investigations in specially selected areas, Dr. Hagan says.

Dr. Elton Announces Enrollment Figures

Dr. Charles F. Elton, Dean of Admissions and Registrar, said Monday that the University has 1,925 out-of-state students enrolled for the full semester.

Dr. Elton said this enrollment is "about the same for out of state students every year. We always have 15-20 percent of such students here."

He commented that there was a primary factor that influenced the enrollment each semester. "That is, whether or not it's a spring or fall semester. I assume by the spring semester's low enrollment of these students that those students who are failing Sweethearts and parents will be giving REMINGTON® LEKTRONIC II shavers for Christmas. Shaving will become easier, cleaner and more comfortable than having a beard.

Here's why: There's the cordless feature. Sealed-in, rechargeable energy cells let you shave without a plug. And what shaves they are! 348 cutting edges of high-carbon steel (sharper and tougher than stainless steel) whisk whiskers off. These edges are honed on an angle. So whiskers get sliced off instead of "ploughed up." 756 whisker-gathering slots in the big shaving head feed whiskers to the cutters faster. And on top of the shaving head: REMINGTON Roller Combs. Adjust to any skin or beard—protect skin; set up whiskers.

Forget to recharge? There's a cord. Plug it in and shave anywhere—so get a REMINGTON LEKTRONIC II for Christmas. After all, you wouldn't want to be the only non-conformist on campus who isn't clean shaven.

Christmas Shopping Hints For Your Favorite Man

Have you braved the crowds on Main Street yet? If you have, do you feel like giving up and giving empty packages this year?

It's always hard to buy the right gifts, especially when it involves the men in your life. There are few really new and different things one can give this year, but I thought for those of you who just couldn't think of a thing this might be of some help.

There is one thing you should remember, few men ever like the ties that women buy for them. After all, those pale blue ones with the cute little white spots just don't appeal to most men. And books are nice, provided they pertain to something they are interested in. What boy would be thrilled on Christmas morning with a book on Scuba Diving when he can't swim, unless it's a gentle hint from his lady love to go jump in the lake.

But back to the unoriginal. The best gifts to give are sweaters. They are usually welcome and like more women, men can always use another sweater especially if it is Perry Como style.

There are other things to give: a cigarette lighter with his initials on it, a key chain, wallet, belt, gloves, scarves, shirts, and the thousand and one items found at the local haberdasher's and department store moutiques.

There are several new entries in the field of male type gifts.

One of the nicest is a battery-powered shoe shiner and buffer. This handy gift is inexpensive and most men need something of this sort. Haven't you noticed the dirty shoes around here?

Another different item is available at local jewelry stores. It is a sterling silver drink mixer, key chain sized. It looks like a pocket knife and has three blades, one with muller, one with a spoon, and the third a little pick. This is a new addition to the collection of things for the man who has everything.

Along the same lines and slightly more expensive is the imitation scotch bottle that has a built-in transistor radio. There is also a dog on the market that has a radio built into it.

Less expensive and just as practical are the sets of blazer buttons with the fraternity crest on them. There are all kinds of tie tacks and recognition pins.

These are the usual run of the mill gifts, as I've said, so here are a few that are different to say the least. Give him a pewter mug with his initials in Old English. Or a silver cigarette case, or expensive cuff links for the french cuff shirt he doesn't own.

Dash down to the drugist and pick up some pep pills, or a crying towel, of razor blades. These should be handy items for that after-final let-down.

If you really want to make his Christmas bright and shiny how about a new car like a Jaguar XKE or an Austin Healy 3000, in a do it yourself kit form for $3.98. He'll kill you. Not really, but they say it's the thought that counts. Or give him a bushel of mistletoe, a branch at a time.

The nicest gift from the standpoint of time and TLC is a hand-knit sweater. This gift takes hours to make and no girl is going to put that much time and energy into a thing unless she really cares about the man she's knitting it for.

Hope these hints have been of some help, happy shopping!

Is Chivalry Dead?

"Where have all the gentlemen gone?
Gone forever, nigh every one.
Oh when will they return?
Oh when will they return?"

This is the age of missiles and moonshots; of running here and rushing there; of punching clocks and pushing buttons. This is the age in which one goes through life at a pace more hectic than that of a highly tuned sports car.

This is the age which also gave women equal rights: job opportunities, voting privileges, voiced opinions, and practically anything else one would consider a "right." However, it appears that when our grandmothers won their equality, they (in theory) began a process which has nearly eradicated masculine respect for their granddaughters.

Where have all the gentlemen gone? Are they so caught in the mad rush, clamoring for the peak of society's pole, that common courtesies and manners appear to them only as blurs of the past?

Granted today's women may not appear as feminine as their great-grandmothers, but appearances are not specific grounds for judgment; after all, femininity cannot be seen. Femininity is a quality—a quality one may glimpse from a gesture, but a quality that is never fully seen.

A hundred years ago a woman was expected to be no more than a woman. She was groomed to be a fine lady. She was educated in the arts; she was witty, warm, and self-controlled; she was a companion and a comforter. Her sole duty in life was to be a loving, understanding wife, and a bearer and rearer of children. The example of such a woman is the stereotype "Southern Belle" of the pre-Civil War South.

Today's women no longer have time to lounge through the day. Career girls put in an eight hour day; housewives and mothers are on duty 24 hours; coeds attend classes, "dormkeep," and participate in numerous activities. These women cannot always be level-headed, calm, and collected. Their tensions build up and eventually burst forth. Does this make them less feminine?

What makes a woman less feminine, and certainly less feminine, is the lack of respect paid to her by the males she works with, goes to school with, or the ones she passes on the street.

What has happened to door opening? Too many girls on campus get doors practically slammed in their faces without the same thing happening elsewhere. Where has the man gone who held a woman's coat while she put it on, who pulled out her chair before they sat down to eat, who held her elbow as they went down steps, who tipped his hat in passing, who gave her his seat in a crowded room or bus? What has happened to the male who walked on the side of the street parallel to the traffic? You would think that men had intentions of having their female companions literally "run down." Where is the man who never used profane language in the presence of a woman, who would never have mentioned a smutty thing in her presence? Where is the man who respected a woman for what she was? Where is the man who will respect today's woman in the same way?

No, today's woman is not looking for the chivalry so commonly associated with courtesy and respect. Rather, she is looking for courtesies which reflect that she is respected. Perhaps this is too much to hope for in this day of "well she's as good as I am, let her do it by herself."

After all, a woman's talents and abilities can make her a man's equal, but it takes respect to make her feel like a woman—which is what she really is.

Campus Parable

In the book of Proverbs, there are many thought-provoking statements. One of these is, "we spend our years as a tale that is told!" With this comes the realization of Shakespeare's quote, "all the world's a stage and we the actors." It is often difficult for us to imagine our lives as an open book or a story being told—difficult and disturbing!

True, we do spend our years and in various ways. First, we can play the spendthrift and waste all that we have to offer. Secondly, we can play the miser and hoard the talent, promise, and personality within, living completely for ourselves, only to find ultimately that no man can live within himself—only exist. Last of all, we can be stewards of that which God has given by sharing in our spending and by making our lives a blessing not only to ourselves but to others.

We spend our lives and it is our decision as to the role we play, whether it be spendthrift, miser, or steward.

Are Americans Economic Illiterates?

Not infrequently we are counseled by our peers and superiors to discount the credibility of all long range prognostications save two—death and taxes. Inasmuch as they seem to be unavoidable, we might reasonably deduce that an inquisitive society, regardless of its socio-economic character, would endeavor to study and learn as much as possible about each.

Let us consider then, not any society, but one that has been founded on the concept of individual right; a society which most of the time permits the individual to decide who will be his leaders, how to earn his daily bread, and, most significant in this case, how much tax he would pay. Certainly the citizens of this community, we might imagine, would wisdom with a fervor if for no other reason than to protect their vested interests!

Such, however, is not the case. For almost all of us know the wealth of our country, like that of our ancient Aztecs, comes from the gold we have stored in a cavern at Fort Knox. Taxes, or economic systems in general, remain as mysterious to us as Egyptian hieroglyphics before the Rosetta Stone.

However, it would be pretty safe to wager that the average American citizen could tell us last year's National League batting champ and his batting average accurate to two hundreds of a percent (.002) but over or undershoot our gross national debt by two hundred billion dollars ($200,000,000,000). We are being presumptuous to assume that he even knows what kind of an animal gross national product is.

But, what should we expect if we consider that less than 15 percent of our high school students will ever take a formal course in economics; and if they by some chance do, it probably will be taught by the assistant football coach? Better yet, less than one-third of our states require even an elementary course in this subject as prerequisite for teaching high school social studies—where economics is supposed to be learned! It's a small wonder, then, that most of us feel "all" our economic ills could be cured if we just stopped giving everything away to the foreigners, or balanced the national budget every year, or got the tax cut in 1964, or run a deficit in 1964, or what not.

We could, perhaps, tolerate such an appalling state of affairs if our current situation was something less than critical. However, today as never before in the history of this nation it is necessary for our general population to become acquainted with economic principles and policies. If we don't, we may find one bright morning that during the night we switched from capitalism to communism and ninety percent of us would not be intelligent enough to tell the difference, unless our paycheck wasn't there on Friday afternoon.

Yankee ingenuity has made a liar out of Khrushchev and his boast to bury us. The recent Russian wheat deal pretty well proves this. Now we should attempt to determine exactly what this yankee ingenuity is.

Luther H. Hodges, in quoting The National Task Force On Economic Education sponsored by The Committee For Economic Development, has suggested the following as the minimum necessity for economic literacy. First, we must acquire an understanding of how a capitalistic, market society determines priorities and allocates resources. Secondly, we should appreciate the role consumers play in determining what goods and services are to be produced in any given year and how the forces of supply and demand operate in many special and distinct markets in determining the prices of these economic goods. Thirdly, we should recognize the intervention and dynamics of government spending and taxing and the effects these have upon the economy and the right of free choice. Lastly, we should be familiar with such basic concepts as savings, investment and capital formation, the law of diminishing returns, the profit motive, and the relationship of our economy to the rest of the world. If we do not score one hundred percent on the above, then, as Mr. Hodges would have it—we're flunking our economic ABC's.

We may readily admit the urgency and necessity of economics but question the expediency of teaching such a difficult and theoretical science in high school to immature minds. Or, perhaps, we don't have the time to learn the rudiments. We must consider these extremely weak arguments. In the first place any child above the age of reason should have a mature enough mind. Secondly, no one in the profession has ever said the subject was easy—what science of value is? It simply means Johnny has to work a little harder, and if our state educational boards can find enough time for a unit or a half a unit for civics, then, they should also find equal time for the other half of civics—economics.

Lord Keynes has given us some provocative food for thought on this issue, "The ideas of economists and political philosophers, both when they are right and when they are wrong, are more powerful than is commonly understood. Practical men, who believe themselves to be quite exempt from any intellectual influences, are usually the slaves of some defunct economist." It has largely been on the strength of Keynesian theory that the federal budget has increased from approximately seven billion dollars during the mid thirties to a proposed ninety-nine billion dollar expenditure budget for the current fiscal year.

Whack Hyder Claims Georgia Tech Can Whip Der Baron's Winning Charges

By BILL BAXTER

"The thing that will make Kentucky better than anybody else we play is that they don't make mistakes."

That was what two Notre Dame scouts who watched Kentucky's 100-80 romp over North Carolina had to say about the undefeated Wildcats.

"We saw the Indiana game," one said, "and I would say that Kentucky is much better than Indiana. Indiana will concede eight floor mistakes a half on the belief that they'll take more shots with their wide-open offense. Kentucky would pick them apart."

The Wildcats play Notre Dame Dec. 28 in Louisville. The Irish lost to Indiana last week 108-102.

"This is the first time we've seen such balanced scoring out of Kentucky," Whack Hyder, the basketball coach at Georgia Tech, said after the Kentucky win.

Hyder was in Lexington for the game to see if early reports that Kentucky had a sub-par team were true. "Kentucky is much improved over last year," he said.

Asked if Georgia Tech was going to beat Kentucky in Atlanta Jan. 4, Hyder laughed. "We figure we can beat anybody on our schedule. That's because I make up the schedule."

The coach who has had more success against Kentucky than any other in the SEC admitted that "Tech will have to play its best ball to beat UK, but "we think we'll be ready."

Hyder also said he knew "all about Mickey Gibson," and that Gibson would push somebody out of a starting spot as soon as he becomes eligible.

"One year they brought Roger Newman down to Atlanta after he had been playing Y ball. They thought we didn't know anything about him, but we had all the information on him."

Asked if his program was so extensive that he scouted YMCA games, the Tech coach laughed and declined comment.

Meanwhile, UK climbed to seventh in the UPI ratings and hoped for perhaps a jump to sixth in the Associated Press poll.

North Carolina's Billy Cunningham led all scorers in the Monday game with 32 points, but Kentucky had five men at 15 or better, and that was the story.

Cotton Nash scored 23, Ted Deeken got 22, Terry Mobley celebrated his 20th birthday with 21, the best night of his career, and Charlie Ishmael got 17.

Sophomore Larry Conley enhanced his new starting role with 15 points and several timely assists.

"Nobody's gonna push Conley out of the starting line-up," Hyder said. "He's a good sophomore."

The quote of the weekend, however, came from a Northwestern radio broadcaster during the Saturday route of the Big Ten contenders.

"If Kentucky is number 11," he said, "I'd sure as hell hate to see the top ten."

With this field goal, Kentucky's Cotton Nash jumped to sixth in the history of all-time UK scoring. Leading the way is former All-American Alex Groza.

Tennis Anyone?

AKRON, Ohio (AP)—Seven years after Shirley Fry gained No. 1 ranking in women's tennis, her home city is naming tennis courts for her.

When Akron wanted to name its Mason Park courts in her honor in 1956, she wrote City Council president Ralph Turner: "I would not like to see my name placed on a nicely painted fence that encloses nothing but weeds."

Akron is using some of its tax money to build the "proper public tennis court facilities" at Mason Park.

Noting this, the now-retired Shirley—who lives in Connecticut with her husband and four children—agreed to have the courts named for her.

Jones Says Tough Greens Ramsey Draws Censure

Atlanta (AP)—Golfing great Bobby Jones was asked what he thought about the current tendency to increase the length of courses to 7,000 yards and more. "You can't make a course more difficult by making it longer," says Jones. "The only way to make it more testing is to introduce subtleties around the green. "What we try to do at Augusta for the Masters is to stay away from fairway hazards. Our members don't want to keep hitting the ball out of sand. Making them hit it close to the pin for that birdie, and making the greens big, is what makes a course difficult.

"I remember I holed a 120-foot putt once at St. Andrews."

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)—Jim Martenhoff, Herald boating editor, urged readers for weeks to renew their boat registration.

The day after the deadline, he wrote, "I didn't get around to renewing my own registration."

Former Wildcat great Frank Ramsey, now Boston Celtic veteran, has been reprimanded for a recent magazine article labeled "Smart Moves by a Master of Deception," and a censure letter has been addressed to him by Walter Kennedy, president of the National Basketball Association.

The article, published in Sports Illustrated, was accompanied by pen sketches illustrating the methods used to lure an opponent into committing a foul.

Kennedy stated: "I have always thought that the mark of success of an athlete is what he can do within the confines of the rules rather than by circumventing the rules. Now for a highly popular player of the world championship team to say publicly he is a master in deception in an attempt to draw fouls by evasion can only mean that the youngsters will attempt to imitate him. His methods are outlined in great detail through pen and ink."

In Boston, Ramsey, former All-America Wildcat guard-forward, said he had not yet received the letter from Kennedy and, "I would rather wait until I see the contents before I make a comment."

Bribe Bill Approved

WASHINGTON—A House judiciary subcommittee has approved Senate-passed legislation to make it a federal crime to fix a sporting event through bribery.

The subcommittee approved the bill after amending it so that the point spread would be covered.

Those found guilty would be subject to a fine of $5000 and 10 years in prison.

The measure was supported by Pete Rozelle, commissioner of the National Football League, and Robert F. Ray, president of the National Collegiate Athletic Assn.

two sets of public service that gives meaningful substance to the hurrahs of inaugural gaiety. The service of Waterfield is broad, albeit contemporaneous. The service of Breathitt is deep, it being rooted back through 132 years of Breathitts in the civic and public affairs of Kentucky.

A toast, now, to Breathitt and Waterfield, two resolute men of vision seasoned by experience! May history record the fruits of their leadership as the true flowering of a Kentucky that has come of age!

Breathitt Takes Over

Former Gov. Combs said he took comfort in leaving the government in good hands. He said the new governor and lieutenant had been tempered in a grueling general election in which some sought to turn Kentuckian against Kentuckian.

"Give these men your faith, sympathy, and prayers," he requested and added, "If I have added to the spirit of Kentucky—I am contented; if I have hurt anyone, forgive me."

Gov. Breathitt and Lt. Gov. Waterfield were sworn in by Circuit Court Judge Ira D. Smith, who added his congratulations and wishes for a good administration after the ceremony.

The inauguration ceremony was presided over by former governor Lawrence W. Wetherby and was coordinated by Foster Oekerman, Gov. Breathitt's campaign chairman.

Faculty Hears Dr. John Oswald

The University Faculty met Monday afternoon and heard University President Dr. John W. Oswald discuss his position on the community colleges.

Dr. Oswald said his talk was not a proposal but merely an information session for the Faculty

Rev. Marvin Whitmer, First Methodist Church, Hopkinsville, gave the invocation. "My Old Kentucky Home" and "The Lords Prayer" were selections offered by the Kentucky State Chorus, and the "National Anthem" was played by the University band. James W. Flynn, mayor of Frankfort, extended a welcome to the new governor and lieutenant governor, and Rev. John C. Chenault, First Christian Church Frankfort, offered the benediction.

EXCITING THINGS HAPPEN AT FORD MOTOR COMPANY!

THE 100,000-MILE ENGINEERING TEST THAT SET OVER 100 NEW WORLD RECORDS

It began September 21 in Florida, when a team of four 1964 Comets, specially equipped and prepared for high-speed driving, set out to do the equivalent of four earth orbits at Daytona International Speedway—100,000 miles at speeds well over 100 miles an hour, round the clock for 40 days, through weather fair and foul.

They did it, all four of them, and they made history! They did it in the full glare of publicity. In semi-tropical heat. In the teeth of torrential squalls that fringed two hurricanes. Including time out for refueling and maintenance, the lead car averaged over 108 miles an hour, toppling over 100 national and world records!*

For all practical purposes this was an engineering trial—the most grueling test of staying power and durability ever demanded of a new car. Only near perfection could stand the punishment dished out to parts and components hour after hour, mile after mile. Brakes, engines, transmissions, ignition systems—every single part a pawn in a grim game of truth or consequence, with total product quality the stake. And they all came through hands down!

Now that it's over and in the record books, what does it mean? New proof of Ford-built stamina and durability! New evidence that Ford-built means better built! Yes—and more, it is a direct reflection of the confidence and creative know-how, the spirit and spunk of Ford Motor Company's engineering, styling and manufacturing team—men who find rewarding adventure in, technical breakthroughs.

More proof of the exciting things that happen at Ford Motor Company to bring brighter ideas and better-built cars to the American Road.
