Qualitative research aka field research is an attempt to understand the behavior of individuals and organizations by getting to know the people involved, their values, habits and beliefs. This work considers the rationale for this research and its relationship to quantitative methods and to techniques for library and information management.

..... WHAT'S HAPPENING

THE KING library buildings, both North and South are to become a virtual non-smoking area. That is to include the outer lobby and the staff lounge, and by the end of the semester, the Deli too.

The new NOTIS 5.1 release has a different look on the OPAC. Many patrons have noticed this. The inherently logical step of typing this. The inherently logical step of typing in "UK" to access the UK Catalog should not take too long to get used to.

..... FROM THE ARCHIVES

FROM THE 1976 REPORT ON ALA, Green Bean, 8/6/76

Gail Kennedy went to see "the widely acclaimed library data management system" at the University of Chicago's Regenstein Library. "The UC Library has built an on-line, interactive data management system that can store and process all of the data and files needed to automate the labor-intensive activities of a large research library. The system is currently in operation and is highly successful. It has automated the various functions of searching, selection, ordering, cataloging and circulation."

It's now 16 years later, and we don't have to go clear up to Chicago to see such a system. It would be interesting to know whether the participants at that ALA foresaw how widespread technology in libraries would become.
