States vying for sniper suspect trial

First shot: Maryland, Virginia, Alabama want trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCKVILLE, Md. — A growing number of officials said Sunday that the state of Maryland should defer prosecution of the two sniper suspects to another jurisdiction where the death penalty could be more easily applied. A Justice Department official suggested Maryland should not be the first to try the case, and the top elected official in Maryland's Montgomery County, where six were slain, urged prosecutors to work together to choose the strongest venue. John Allen Muhammad, 41, and teenager John Lee Malvo were to be charged on Monday in Virginia, where three of the killings took place. The suspects already face multiple murder charges in Maryland, and murder charges in Alabama unrelated to the sniper shootings. They also could be charged with federal extortion and murder counts that could bring the death penalty. "They need to present a unified front to the public and say: 'Here's how we're going to handle this,' and wherever the case is strongest with the stiffest penalties, that's where they need to go," said Montgomery County Executive Douglas Duncan. His comments were among the first from Maryland officials suggesting the possibility of an other venue. Montgomery County State's Attorney Douglas Gansler said Sunday he still believes his state should prosecute the case first, but "we're open to discussions with all the jurisdictions." Gansler acknowledged that the toughest sentence Malvo could get in Maryland would be life without the possibility of parole, but argued that his state has the strongest case because it suffered the heaviest losses. The Justice Department suggested Sunday it is unlikely Maryland will be the first jurisdiction to try the sniper suspects, who remain in federal custody on federal firearms and material witness warrants issued before their capture. Virginia and Alabama may be more likely than Maryland to carry out executions. Maryland has put just three people to death, and all executions have been suspended under a moratorium. And a 17-year-old would be eligible for the death penalty in Virginia and Alabama but not in Maryland. Virginia law, unlike Maryland, includes a post-Sept. 11 provision that allows for execution when the killer has "intent to intimidate the civilian population at large." Federal law enforcement authorities are reviewing possible charges relating to extortion and murder that might allow for all the shootings to be combined in a single case and would allow for the death penalty on conviction.

Minnesota senator, wife remembered

Local ties: Sheila Wellstone, a native of eastern Kentucky, dropped out of UK to marry Paul

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — They met at 16, married at 19, and spent nearly four decades forging an intensely close-knit relationship that spanned the personal and political.

When news filtered out Friday that U.S. Sen. Paul Wellstone had been killed in a plane crash on his way to a funeral, few close friends wondered for long whether his wife, Sheila, was with him.

"They were inseparable," said Dave Foster, head of District 11 United Steelworkers of America and a personal friend. Those who knew the Wellstones best say their marriage was one of the rare partnerships that politics actually strengthened.

"They seemed to grow closer the longer they were together," said Sarah Stoesz, a former member of Wellstone's Washington staff.

Sheila, a reluctant public speaker, had become her husband's full-time campaign surrogate by the end of his second term. She stumped for him across the state while he remained in Washington.

The Southern Baptist girl from eastern Kentucky and the Jewish son of Russian immigrants started out as typical lovesick teens from different worlds, in a union that most family members opposed.

They went to separate colleges: Sheila Ison to the University of Kentucky, Paul Wellstone to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. But they were miserable apart. They married, and Sheila dropped out of college to move to Chapel Hill, where she gave birth to son within a year.

The marriage was, and in some ways remained, traditional. Sheila never did return to college, but worked to put Paul through graduate school.

When the couple moved to Northfield, Minn., in 1969, Sheila continued as a homemaker and assistant librarian while Paul became a political science professor.

Raising three kids kept Sheila at home, even while Paul was off raising hell, walking picket lines and organizing the disenfranchised of Rice County. By the time Wellstone scored his upset U.S. Senate victory in 1990, the Wellstones' youngest son was leaving for college.

That's when their relationship started the transition from traditional marriage to contemporary equal partnership. Friends say they made it with ease.

"When people are thrust in a public role, some rise with grace, and she did," said friend Pam Costain.

"Paul insisted that she was going to be part of everything," Costain recalled. "He told her: 'We're doing this together.' He wanted her to find her voice."

"He was fiercely in love with her and she was fiercely in love with him."

Homecoming a sweet reunion for some graduates

“Let's tell the truth, the important thing in life is the people you're involved with.”

— Cullie Sparks, 1952 graduate who returned to campus for Homecoming festivities.

Memories: Alumni share stories as they reunite, some saw one another for the first time in decades

By Emily Burton
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Fifty years ago, two best friends hugged each other goodbye and began separate lives.

As they started their families in new cities, Fran McMullen and Angela Sievert lost contact with each other.

This weekend, the women reunited on the same campus where they parted half a century ago.

"We were roommates my freshman and sophomore year, but then I left school to start a family," said McMullen, who later graduated from St. Louis University in 1957. "The girls in the dorm called us Frangie and Angie — it was a joke."

Sievert first began the search for McMullen when she realized her 50th reunion was approaching. "I had to look on the Internet," she said. "I went to the Yellow Pages, but there was nothing. I remembered she was engaged to a football coach in school. I remembered his name because it was unusual. I took a chance and called the only person I could find with that name."

Sievert placed her chance call to Phoenix, Ariz., from her home in Florida.

"Fran answered the phone, and I said 'I know you aren't the person I'm looking for, because I don't recognize your voice.' Sievert said, smiling and laughing, 'I was so surprised because I was so sure [the voice] wasn't her, and it was.'"

From that lucky phone call, the two women began a correspondence nine months ago and started planning for a reunion at UK, the stomping ground they had not set foot on since postage stamps cost only three cents. They later met at the Cincinnati airport on the way to this weekend's reunion.

The reunion this Homecoming weekend brought together alumni of classes since 1936. Graduates ate together at a banquet and spent the weekend at receptions and other activities, recalling their college days and updating on another on years they had missed.

Great Depression and had to save what money he could.

"I didn't have too many means, you know — no car, so I did what I could," Rose said. "I would hitchhike to campus every day and then back home again. I don't know how I did it."

Rose's girlfriend and future wife was a resident of Jewel Hall.

"I rented a car to go see Gone with the Wind. It was ten cents an hour and ten cents per mile back then," he said.

Everette Bailey also remembered the hard times on campus. A graduate of 1939, he worked part time at a restaurant for free meals. "It was 25 cents a meal, and if you wanted to splurge, ice cream was an extra 10 cents," Bailey said.

After the Great Depression, the country fought the Red Scare. The main issue on campus, though, was not McCarthyism. In 1949, blacks were admitted to the UK graduate program, but campus was far from integrated. McMullen remembered the discussions in her dorm in 1948. "I knew a girl in my hall whose father said he wouldn't let her come back if blacks were allowed on campus."

Despite controversy on campus, Nat King Cole's "Unforgettable" topped charts around the country, while the Four Aces sang "Tell Me Why," both popular black singers on the radio in 1952. Sievert was a radio personality during the height of their popularity working in Elizabethtown for WTEL, the "Fort Knox Salute." Known as The Lonesome Gal, Sievert had a daily radio program for the local troops to keep them from getting lonely.

"(My husband) was the only officer that ever sent a fan letter, and he came down to the station and left his name. We had a military wedding at Fort Knox, an arch of sabers and all," Sievert said.

Coming home

Sievert, now a widow, used Homecoming weekend to reminisce.

"Some of the streets ring a bell, but campus has really changed," said Sievert, who toured the WT Young Library with McMullen. "The design and construction was spectacular. I'm really proud they built this for UK."

"It's much larger and more efficient," said McMullen when she compared Young with her college library, the M. L. King Library. Bob Moore, a 1952 graduate, said he hadn't seen the renovated campus recently either.

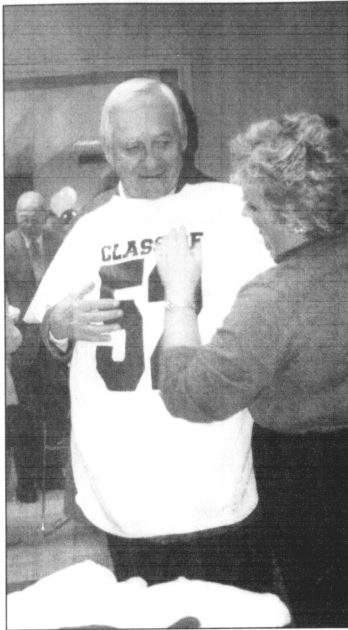

"I taught Russian at UK in the '60s, but I don't get on campus much anymore," he said. "Parking is too much of a problem."

Moore, who attended the reunion luncheon Friday, was the student assistant for the 1951 NCAA Championship basketball team when they played in New York.

"It was a long tournament, you know, and I didn't pack enough socks for the team. So I had to go out into New York City to look for socks. I ended up buying them at Abercrombie and Fitch," Moore said. "I've often wondered if we lost in '52 because we didn't have those socks."

Cullie Sparks, also in the class of 1952, attended the reunion. He said he thought the reunion was a success.

"Let's tell the truth," Sparks said as he talked over the soft jazz band playing behind him. "The important things in life is the people you're involved with.

"Having graduated with 1,200 students and finding two other guys I went to school with here is more important than anything else."

As a cellist played a quiet solo, Sparks said. "The proudest thing is that I've lived this long, and am physically able to come up here for this — to come make contact with my youth."

Foo Fighters One by One

By Jack Hopkins
CONTRIBUTING MUSIC CRITIC

It's been three years since the Foo Fighters' last release, There's Nothing Left to Lose — and it sure does seem that way.

Since 1999, the band has endured its share of ups and downs.

After touring heavily, band members went back to the studio to record their next album, but they failed to get as they had in the past.

Recording stopped and drummer Taylor Hawkins went into drug rehab after overdosing and almost killing himself.

This depressed lead singer Dave Grohl, so he decided to join friends from Queens of the Stone Age on tour, as their drummer.

He worked well with Queens and helped record songs for their new album, Songs for the Deaf, which came out this summer.

People began to think the band was breaking up, but Grohl and the other members dismissed that rumor.

For those who don't remember, Grohl was the drummer for Nirvana in the late '80s and early '90s.

Grohl and former Nirvana band mate Krist Novoselic endured months of torture by Courtney Love, ex-wife of Nirvana lead singer Kurt Cobain (who committed suicide in 1994), over the ownership of the band's music, especially some unreleased material.

Through all of this mess, the Foo Fighters were able to come up with 11 fresh songs for their fourth studio album, One By One.

From the rock heavy songs "All My Life," "Low" and the Nirvana-like "Comeback," to the general style of their past albums, in "Have It All" and "Halo," One By One contains unmistakable Foo Fighters music.

Grohl also brought some influences from Queens of the Stone Age into this new album, but for the most part, it's like its predecessors, which is not a bad thing.

In spite of the album's highlights, there is some disappointment.

It doesn't offer as many head-banging songs as on the band's initial work, Foo Fighters, arguably their finest.

But luckily, One By One isn't as poppy as There's Nothing Left to Lose, as the band always seem to throw in some softer, melodic songs along with the rocking tunes.

For "Disenchanted Lullaby," a song unlike any the band has attempted to record, Grohl does an imitation of Mick Jagger — and it provides a good example of his famous raspy scream.

One By One demonstrates that the Foo Fighters are not like many rock groups.

They can stay together, not burn out or sell out, and keep coming at you with new tunes, no matter how rock music has changed.

WEEK IN REVIEW

Here's a look back at events and issues from last week. If you want to sound off on any of these, e-mail the Dialogue desk at dialogue@kykernel.com

WEDNESDAY

Student Government's proposal to place a student liaison on the Lexington-Fayette Urban County Council might also serve the Transylvania University student body, SG President Tim Robinson announced at a news conference.

Robinson said he hopes the non-voting liaison will also meet with Transylvania students. Transylvania SGA President Brian Meyer said he had not spoken with Robinson about the plan, but "would welcome it."

Robinson said he hopes the council will begin to consider the plan in January when new candidates take office.

THURSDAY

Authorities arrested two men in Maryland and charged them in connection with the string of sniper shootings that killed 10 and left three people wounded over the last three weeks.

John Allen Muhammad, 41, and John Lee Malvo, 37, were found sleeping in their car at an interstate rest stop. A .22-caliber rifle was found in the car, which had an opening in the trunk that permitted someone to lie inside and fire the rifle. Ballistic tests later confirmed the rifle found in the car was used in the shootings.

A fingerprint from a liquor store hold-up in Montgomery, Ala., led police to the men.

FRIDAY

Sen. Paul Wellstone, D-Minn., was killed in a plane crash in northern Minnesota. His wife, daughter and five others also died in the crash.

Wellstone, one of the foremost liberals in Congress, had been locked in a tight re-election race with Republican Norm Coleman. Earlier this month, he was virtually the only Democrat to vote against legislation to authorize the use of force in Iraq.

Democrats are asking former Vice President Walter Mondale to take Wellstone's place on the ballot. Under Minnesota state law, they have until the close of the business day Thursday to replace Wellstone.

SATURDAY

Russian troops successfully raided a theatre where 50 Chechens had held about 800 people hostage since Thursday.

All 50 hostage-takers died in the pre-dawn raid. They had demanded that Russia withdraw its troops from the breakaway republic of Chechnya.

Of the hostages, 115 were killed in the raid and another 150 are in critical condition.

Russian medical officials said the hostage deaths and injuries resulted from health problems caused by a gas that was pumped into the theatre before the raid. The name of the gas has not been released, but medical officials said it was a drugging agent used for anaesthesia before surgery.

SUNDAY

A Palestinian suicide bomber attacked a West Bank Jewish settlement, killing three Israeli officers and wounding 20 other people in Ariel.

Al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades, a militant group linked to Palestinian President Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction, claimed responsibility for the attacks.

Israeli troops killed two al-Aqsa militants in Nablus. Palestinians called it an assassination while the army said the men died in a gun battle.

The explosion followed a suicide bombing Monday that killed 14 in Israel and prompted a large army sweep for militants in the West Bank City of Jenin.

WHAT TO EXPECT

Here's a look at events happening this week and a preview of this week's papers.

TODAY

Sniper suspect John Allen Muhammad and John Lee Malvo will be charged in two shootings in Spotsylvania County, Va., Common Wealth Attorney William F. Neely said.

The two men were charged with six counts of murder Friday by Montgomery County, Md., prosecutors.

IN THEIR OPINION

Third parties should be included in election debates

A rumble of disgust can be heard in the United States every other year. Third-party candidates all over are trying to break into the bipolar system we fondly maintain from November to November.

While candidates from the two major parties usually duke it out over the airwaves, in the opinion pages and in the slick fliers that grace our mailboxes, the third-party candidates are often names we hardly recognize. This is exacerbated when the major candidates receive free advertising when they are profiled in the paper or featured on the news.

Third-party candidates rarely get to break in on the publicity available in the press. A common complaint is the exclusion of third party candidates from political debates. This denies them the exposure of their views as well as the chance to comment on those of other candidates.

While few third-party candidates receive more than a single-digit percentage of votes, they often focus on issues away from the tired platform of the two candidates trying to win the popularity contest.

What, then, can be done to rectify the situation and bring the ideas, views and diversity third parties offer to the forefront?

First, debate among the candidates for any seat should be encouraged. While a debate among three or four has a different tone than between two, it also may force candidates to differentiate themselves on the issues, rather than focus on what their opponent has done wrong.

If candidates would run on issues, the tenor of the entire election season would shift. Major party candidates might broaden their appeal by showing they are neither as liberal nor as conservative as some of their third party counterparts who can often be considered radical.

Democracy is best served when people with a variety of concerns and solutions are brought together. If we trust the public to vote for candidates, the public should also be entrusted with sifting through information provided by candidates in making those decisions.

While voters can certainly seek out information on alternative candidates or even mount their own write-in campaigns, major media attention to third-party candidates by allowing for more than two podiums in a debate is arguably one of the most effective ways for voters to weigh the opponents against one another.

Time to close campus bisector

“Instead of re-opening it ... officials ought to have considered permanently shutting down this death trap.”

For yet another week, by some miracle, I have managed to attend class on campus without becoming road kill.

Any student who crosses the continuous line of cars we call Rose Street knows this accomplishment.

From 10 a.m. until 10 p.m., this major campus bisector is a never-ending traffic jam, making it a danger to both drivers and, of course, pedestrians like me.

The UK Board of Trustees will begin to consider yet another long-term plan for campus in December, and one provision of the plan under consideration is to close Rose Street to traffic.

After years of adding crosswalks and even pretty flashing lights, it's good to know a real solution is in the works, dubious as those works may be.

Just a few months ago, Rose was closed at Limestone due to hospital renovation.

Instead of re-opening it as a narrow pass by still-unfinished construction, city and University officials ought to have considered permanently shutting down this death-trap.

Rose Street is bad news for students and bad news for the University. As the number of students increases, the number of people swarming across this busy road at class change is sure to increase as well.

Most Lexington drivers are courteous enough to yield, but it only takes one driver running late (or for that matter intoxicated) to cause disaster.

No matter how busy the street gets, or how many students wander across it every day, there is no serious discussion about closing this street to traffic.

Pedestrians are injured regularly on Rose, and for every hit there are a dozen near-misses. Talk to any student who has lived on campus for any length of time, and you're likely to hear about a time they were nearly mowed down just trying to get to class.

There are few compelling reasons to keep Rose Street open. While it makes the drive between Euclid and Limestone a bit shorter, the number of slow lights on the street makes that difference in commute negligible.

University and Columbia avenues provide access to the housing around the library and time has proven that the hospital can be accessed from the other side.

In fact, there are several benefits other than safety to closing Rose.

The additional space could be used for new buildings or, more unlikely, open spaces on campus. Additionally, it would keep the pollution of a busy road off of UK's campus.

By making campus more contiguous, it would make UK more attractive and welcoming to its students, many of whom would no longer have to risk their lives to get to and from class in 10-minute waves.

The University and the city ought to take a hard look at the problems of Rose Street, examine the evidence, and ultimately begin the process of closing this dangerous eye-sore.

Cats' second-half collapse spoils upset bid of Dawgs

If college football games were only 30 minutes, the UK football team would be proclaiming a win over the No. 5 team in the nation, the Georgia Bulldogs.

It was the second 30 minutes that ruined the Cats' chance of an upset Saturday in a 52-24 loss.

"I don't think the schemes changed too much, but they just decided to play the second half," said UK coach Guy Morriss.

Going into the locker room, the Cats were only sitting on three-point cushion, leading 24-21. But UK did not come out of halftime the same team, going scoreless while surrendering 31 second-half points.

"We didn't protect as well the whole second half," Morriss said. "It was a combination of probably what we didn't do and, like I said, that they just decided at halftime to crank it up and they came after us."

The Cats and Dawgs swapped scores the entire first half. UK scored first on Artose Pinner's longest run of the game, a 23-yard rush on the opening play of UK's second series.

The Dawgs converted a 3rd and 5 into a 25-yard touchdown reception from quarterback David Greene to wide receiver Damien Gary to tie the game 7-7 less than five minutes removed from the kickoff.

"They are really talented," Morriss said. "We just couldn't get off the field. We couldn't cover anybody tonight. They've got the horses."

UK showed off some horses of its own. After quarterback Jared Lorenzen hit receiver Derek Abney on a 29-yard pass, Lorenzen let it loose again on the next play this time catching wide out Aaron Boone for a 25-yard score.

"I felt like we could play with them, but they are a great team and we found that out today," Boone said.

In what turned out to be the format of the entire game, Georgia switched quarterbacks for their next possession. Freshman D.J. Shockley led his team down the field to tie the game on a 15-yard pass to tight end Benjamin Watson.

"About the time we could get zeroed on Greene, they would put in Shockley," Morriss said. "I think it changed the rhythm on us. We just never really did feel too comfortable."

The Cats rounded out scoring in the first half — what ended up being their last touchdown of the day — when Lorenzen completed a 60-yard pass to Abney to send UK into halftime up 24-21.

Georgia came out of the break firing, scoring two touchdowns in less than five minutes. It scored 17 more unanswered points, including a touchdown run by Ronnie Powell with 56 seconds left in the game.

"I don't know why we didn't come to play," Abney said. "But we've always bounced back. We can duck our tails and kind of roll through the rest of the season not knowing if we will win or lose, or we can get grounded again and get back to our winning ways."

Freshman helps Cats overcome bad first half

Ignited: Peters nets first career goal to help UK men's soccer to 2-1 victory

By Alex Williams

The UK men's soccer team defeated Northern Illinois 2-1 Sunday in a game where its first half was as bad as the second half was good.

Looking stagnant on offense and unorganized on defense, the Cats (9-7-0, 2-2) managed only one shot on goal in the first half and missed out on countless opportunities.

During halftime the Cats made the proper adjustments, and digested the silent protest by coach Ian Collins.

The Cats have found themselves behind early in the first half often this season and yesterday was no different.

The Cats knew they had to play better in the second half, and answered the call, or lack thereof, by Collins.

Peters said a fiery halftime speech by Collins wasn't necessary because the team knew it needed a fierce performance in the second half.

"There were no words to be said; we knew what we needed to do," said freshman midfielder Anthony Peters. "There didn't need to be any talking. We only needed to talk with our actions on the field."

In the 53rd minute, junior Nathan Fleetwood sailed a corner kick into a horde of players and senior Chris McDaniel headed it into the near post to knot the game at 1-1.

Several scoring opportunities were missed, and perhaps Peters' shot that sailed over the goal from six yards out was the most obvious. Peters redeemed himself 10 minutes later and carded the winning goal on a header assisted by freshman Dani Kamras in the 78th minute for the biggest goal of his short career.

Collins was very pleased with the victory. The Cats are a team of the walking wounded: starting senior goalkeeper Greg Raber was out with a broken thumb and captain J.D. Stephenson was out with a leg injury. Numerous other Cats are fighting nagging injuries.

Collins said the team has to learn how to play a balanced game. If the team can solve its first half woes then the team will be more potent on offense, Collins said.

"We've got to cure the problem of why we play bad in the first half and play good in the second half."

"We've just got to finish our chances, but it was a great way to see Anthony (Peters) get the game-winning goal."
