LS 2000 UPDATE

LS2000 is "live" in King Circulation and three public access terminals for online catalog searching are operational in the King Reference Dept. The Cataloging Dept. is actively adding records daily to the online catalog. The Agriculture, Law and Medical Libraries are also adding their cataloging into the online database.

We are well into the process of adding the gap tapes to the online database. These tapes contain the bibliographic records created between June 1984 and June 1985--after the cutoff date for the initial database and until the date on which cataloging began going directly into the LS2000 database. A considerable number of retrospective conversion records are also included on the gap tapes. We have about 30,000 of the total 90,000 gap records loaded, bringing our overall database to a size of some 345,000 records.

The acceptance testing of the system continues. We are carefully examining all functions of the LS2000 for accuracy and reliability and also testing the system response time according to standards set out in our contract. This process will go on until all functions have passed our stringent standards and we are satisfied that the system as a whole is stable. In the meantime, staff input on any system problem is essential. Please report any unusual response in using LS2000 to either Mike Lach, Gail Kennedy, Tari Keller, or Bernie Baldini in the Medical Center Library.

For those staff who have not yet experienced using LS2000, we encourage you to try it! The public terminals in the Reference Dept. are equipped with guides for using the system. We are finding that library patrons are, for the most part, picking up the basics with little or no staff intervention. The Planning Committee will be working on more formal staff training programs, but everyone should be able to gain basic familiarity with LS2000 via the self-instruction guides.

We appreciate the spirit and effort of teamwork which has already gone into the LS2000 implementation. (Contributed by Gail Kennedy.)

NEW REFERENCE TOOLS: INFOTRAC AND LEGALTRAC

The libraries have acquired, on a trial basis, the InfoTrac and LegalTrac automated reference systems from Information Access Company. InfoTrac is roughly equivalent in coverage to IAC's Magazine Index and Business Index, which have been available in King Library for several years now on ROM microfilm readers; LegalTrac, which offers the same coverage as IAC's Legal Resource Index and Current Law Index, is available in the Law Library. The new systems offer access to the respective IAC databases, stored on videodisc, via IBM-pc's designed to require no special training or staff assistance. Labeled function keys and help screens allow users to search and retrieve by LC subject headings and to move instantaneously from one part of the index to another. (Cross-references are included; a special "Subject Guide" feature provides an on-demand display of all subject headings used.) Each station is equipped with an inkjet printer so that patrons can quickly produce a copy of a single citation or a full bibliography. Coverage of both systems begins in 1982, with monthly videodisc updates. InfoTrac includes current citations to the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal.

Two InfoTrac stations are in King Library Reference, and two LegalTrac stations are located in the Law Library. Both have proved to be very popular with students and faculty. Library staff are encouraged to have a look, and to direct any comments to reference librarians or to fill out one of the questionnaires near the access stations. (Contributed by Brad Grissom.)
