

Proposed budget cuts could slice student aid

By FRAN STEWART
Senior Staff Writer

President Reagan's proposed budget will be submitted to Congress today, and it could mean bad news for more than 2,500 UK students.

As part of his plan to reduce the federal budget deficit, Reagan has proposed major cuts in loans and grants for college students.

"Everything you're hearing is just proposed," said Bobby Halsey, associate director of the UK Office of Student Financial Aid. "He (Reagan) sent a proposed budget... outlining several things that could happen."

And the things that could happen come September 1986 include denying Guaranteed Student Loans for all college students with family incomes in excess of $32,500. Pell Grants, government gifts of up to $1,900, also would be restricted to students with family incomes of less than $25,000.

Under the GSL program, students can borrow money from lending institutions with the government's guarantee that the institution will be repaid. Repayment of the loan, at between 7 percent and 9 percent interest, is deferred as long as the borrower remains a student, according to this year's edition of The Student Guide, which explains the five federal financial aid programs.

Undergraduates can borrow up to $2,500 per year and graduate students can receive up to $5,000 in loans each year. Under the current system, the GSL program is restricted to students with family incomes in excess of $30,000 must show a legitimate need.

Reagan's proposal would affect about 35 percent of the UK students who receive GSLs and about 5 percent of students who now receive Pell Grants, according to Halsey.

Halsey said that this year an estimated 7,000 students borrowed about $16 million in GSLs, and about 10,000 students received $9 million in Pell Grants on the Lexington campus and in the community college system.

But the proposal has the potential to affect all students receiving financial assistance. All college students, regardless of financial situations, would be restricted to receiving no more than $4,000 in total federal aid.

"That would have an effect on a lot of students," Halsey said.

The current cost for attending UK was estimated at $4,424 per student, and next year the financial aid office anticipates a budget of about $4,728. This cost includes tuition, room and board, books and supplies and a personal miscellaneous expense.

"You can see what a $4,000 maximum would do," Halsey said. "It's $728 less than our budget for next year."

This situation would make it necessary for parents to make sacrifices or for students to get jobs, he said.

But for students who participate in the College Work-Study Program, their earnings would be included in the $4,000 aid ceiling, said William J. Bennett, education secretary-designate.

According to an Associated Press report, "Bennett said the Education Department is trying to save money by cracking down on student loan defaults, but still needs additional savings. The proposed eligibility and aid caps are designed to achieve further savings."

"At this point we don't know what's going to happen," Bennett said. See BUDGET, page 5.

Research to develop mine safety through self-rescue training

By NATALIE CAUDILL
Staff Writer

UK researchers have received more than $500,000 to study ways to improve safety training in underground coal mines.

Henry Cole, principal investigator of the project and a professor in the department of Education and Counseling Psychology, said the funding comes from the U.S. Bureau of Mines.

The three-year project is concerned with developing exercises to teach critically needed skills, such as fire fighting, emergency evacuation, use of self-rescue devices and emergency first aid measures, Cole said. It also will examine current training and testing methods at mines in several states, review the published research in this technology and develop a set of model training exercises to simulate emergency situations.

Cole said the project would have three phases: the first year will involve developing plans for better emergency techniques and the second year of the project will focus on implementing these plans in mining training courses and miners themselves would try them out. The research teams will then evaluate the results of these experiments during the third year.

The Behavioral Research and Mine Safety and Health, which is organized under and partially supported by the Institute for Mining and Minerals Research, has responded to this project, Cole said. BRASH will make it easier for the University and IMMR to respond to requests for technical assistance to secure research and development projects.

Cole said these skills, which are required by state and federal law, are now taught in miner training courses in a classroom-type situation. According to many recent studies, skills of this type tend to show large drops of proficiency over time.

Anyone on a professional level needs some type of a refresher course to relearn emergency procedures, Cole said. He said it is not because of what people have instilled before — that mine employees are not as intelligent as white collar workers.

"The research is clear that people at all levels — technical levels — have trouble remembering these things and it's not the case of miners being any different... I get really upset when people lay these sorts of things on working class folks," he said.

Officers leave positions in UK Democrat group

By ANDREW DAVIS
Senior Staff Writer

Two officers of Young Democrats recently resigned in protest over the direction the group has taken in its campus projects.

One of those projects — proposing an amendment to the University's Student Rights and Responsibilities handbook that would prohibit discrimination based on a student's sexual orientation — was the probable cause of the resignations, according to Susan Brothers, president of the group.

Glenn Slack, group secretary, and Anthony Strong, parliamentary, submitted formal letters of resignation to Brothers late last week. She accepted both resignations.

"I don't feel it's our area to get involved in," Slack said of the amendment, which was proposed by Young Democrats, the Gay and Lesbian Union of Students, the National Organization for Women, Socially Concerned Students and Emergence, a feminist newspaper.

Although Slack had other reasons for resigning, he said the amendment was one of his main reasons. "We can't be split," he said. "Susan has her mind set upon it (the revision)."

Strong said, however, his resignation was not because of the proposed amendment.

New chauffeur service provides way home for people who have had one too many — and their cars

By NANCY MAHURIN
Staff Writer

It was 12:15 a.m. when David Parker, 20, escorted an inebriated man out of a bar in Chevy Chase.

David and his father, Jerry, 40, discussed the best route to take him home.

"We try to choose a route which saves the person money," Jerry said.

"Most people don't like to leave their car at a bar all night," Jerry said. If a person takes a taxi home they have to leave their car behind.

But the Parkers, both employees of "TAP OUT" Chauffeur Service, offer a special service. "TAP OUT" provides transportation for people who are unable to drive home because they've had too much to drink.

The company charges $10 for the first five miles, then a dollar for each extra mile. The chauffeurs are paid by commission.

"Most of the people have had a few (drinks), and maybe they're already have a DUI, so they'd rather use the service then risk the loss of their license or spending time in jail," Jerry said. "Surprisingly, most of the calls we get are from people who don't consider themselves drunk."

Glenn Terndrop, a UK graduate, shovels snow off the roof of the Maranatha Christian Fellowship on South Limestone St. yesterday. Terndrop said he wanted to get all the snow off the roof before today's expected snowfall.

Both Jerry and David have chauffeur's licenses. To drive people home in their cars, this license is required by law, said James Cornett, owner of "TAP OUT."

Cornett started the business about four months ago, when he recognized a market for the service. At first, business was slow, he said, but the crackdown on drunk driving has made his business grow. "This year, things have picked up," he said. "We had more than 100 calls on New Year's Eve."

People hear of the service from others who have used it, Cornett said. Also, "TAP OUT" business cards are left in many popular bars. "TAP OUT" started with Cornett and four or five other drivers. Now Cornett employs about 30 drivers.

The busiest nights are usually Friday and Saturday, he said. The average number of calls on those nights are from 20 to 30. Calls vary with the weather, he said.

The caller must have a car to be able to use the service. "We can't legally take a person home if they have no car," Cornett said. The service does get those types of calls, especially in cold weather when people are unable to get a hold of taxi services, he said.

The service is closed on Sundays, but Cornett said he may start operating on Sundays because they have been getting calls. "You've got to be there when they need you," he said. Most of the customers come from bars, Cornett said. They are generally older people who have jobs and more to lose if they are caught driving drunk.

"At first I thought the age group would be somewhere between 20 to 30," Cornett said, "but I was shocked to find the ages of the people are between 30 to 45." However, the service has gotten calls from people as young as 16, he said.

The service has a main office in Midway, Ky, but there are drivers who are on call throughout the Lexington area, Cornett said. Some of the drivers are only on call until 1 a.m. but they have responded to calls as late as 5:30 a.m.

UK team's harvester two in one

'Unique' machine speeds farming

By JANICE GALLAGHER
Reporter

Three UK agricultural research engineers have invented a tobacco and vegetable harvesting aid which will increase working productivity 30 percent to 40 percent and make it easier for farmers to harvest crops.

Larry Swetnam, James Casada and Linus Walton designed the unique gas-powered machine that can cultivate, transplant and cut tobacco and harvest vegetables.

"It is not the only harvesting aid on the market but it is the only one with a multi tobacco and vegetable harvester," Walton said.

Traditionally, tobacco is cut by hand with a spear and put on a stick with a spear at the end. The tobacco harvester aid is a self-steering machine with three wheels and a seat for the driver who guides the tobacco onto the stick.

The engineers began building the machine in 1979 and completed it a year later. In 1981 it was commercially advertised, Casada said.

The tobacco harvester aid cost $2,995. The tobacco harvester with the vegetable aid cost $4,250, Swetnam said.

"There is no comparison over hand picking. Imagine laying on your stomach in the shade of the harvester aid picking pickles or stopping over and picking them in the sun," Swetnam said.

"The major advantage is to make it easier, the secondary purpose is to do it faster," Walton said. "It is about 30 to 40 percent faster than doing it by hand."

Swetnam said they received a grant from the Burley Council for Tobacco to finance the invention and the UK Research Foundation gets the royalties.

"There is potential money off this," Swetnam said. But the inventors said that their interest in the machine lies in helping the farmers of Kentucky.

"There are no definite plans to improve the machine. The farmers using it make us aware of the needed improvements. We are keeping our eyes open for modifications," Swetnam said.

The Four Star Tobacco Company has the rights to the machine and "there are 200 harvesting aids out there somewhere," Swetnam said.

Central Equipment Company Inc. in Lexington is currently selling the tobacco harvester aid.

The engineers said they are working on another machine that will help farmers harvest tobacco, but declined to comment further.

Clutch free throws lift Cats in OT

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Kenny Walker hit both ends of a one-and-one at the foul line with five seconds left in overtime to give Kentucky a 49-47 victory over Auburn in Southeastern Conference college basketball play Saturday.

Auburn coach Sonny Smith contended his team was robbed of a chance for a winning shot in regulation because officials failed to stop the clock when Kentucky's Roger Harden fouled Gerald White moments before the buzzer.

The officials ruled time had expired. Smith said two or three seconds should have been left on the clock for an in-bounds play.

"This has to be one of the most disappointing losses I've had since I've been in coaching because it shouldn't have happened," Smith said. "The game should be decided by the kids."

Auburn missed a chance to go ahead with 1:25 left in the overtime period and tied the score at 47 when Frank Ford missed the front end of a one-and-one.

Kentucky, using a slow-down offense and rarely taking shots until the 45-second shot clock was down to 10 seconds, was led by Walker's 15 points. Richard Madison added 14.

Chuck Person scored 14 points and Chris Morris 10 for Auburn.

Auburn, 12-7 overall and 4-6 in the SEC, took the biggest lead of the game when Morris snared an offensive rebound and scored with 10:22 remaining to put the Tigers ahead 35-30.

Kentucky, 11-8 and 6-4, went ahead 43-41 on a 15-foot jumper by Ed Davender with 4:10 left, but White tied the game with two foul shots with 2:15 to go. Neither team could manage another point in regulation.

In addition to the ruling at the end of regulation, Smith was upset that an Auburn basket was disallowed when officials ruled the ball had struck the shot clock on top of the backboard.

Kentucky coach Joe B. Hall said his team fell behind early in the second half because "we were missing the easy shots."

"We did some changing in our offense and started getting the shots we needed," Hall said. "We both were playing with young teams, and that can account for the low scoring and sloppy play."

Smith added that the loss to Kentucky was a personal letdown for him as well as his team.

"This is my most discouraging loss," he said. "Every year we play these guys, it's clouded by controversy. It blows my mind we just can't come in and play Kentucky without something happening."

Lady Kats suffer road losses to New Orleans and Ole Miss

Staff reports

The Kentucky Lady Kats, who upset fifth-ranked Georgia last week to close the gap in the Southeastern Conference Eastern Division race, suffered an 82-56 loss to seventh-ranked Mississippi yesterday.

Mississippi's Jennifer Gilmon scored 25 points to lead all scorers as Ole Miss kept its 17 game winning streak alive — the longest winning streak in the nation.

The Lady Rebels jumped out on top early and built up a 46-27 lead at the half.

Ole Miss is now 20-1 overall and 7-0 in the SEC while Kentucky falls to 14-7 and 3-2.

The loss for the Lady Kats was the second straight road loss. UK was upset by unranked New Orleans 86-81 on Friday night.

Leslie Nichols was the only Lady Kat to score in four double figures with 20. Nichols pulled down a game high 14 rebounds.

"Nichols is as fine a ball player as I've ever seen, the only thing that can stop her is if coach (Terry) Hall decides to substitute for her," Mississippi coach Van Chancellor said. "She's too big for a small player and too quick for a big player."

Lady Kats senior guard Diane Stephens was second in scoring with eight points.

Guards Sandy Harding and Monique Tarantini along with forward Karen Mosley added six points each for UK.

The Lady Kats committed 16 turnovers and hit only 27 of 72 shots from the field for 37.5 percent.

O'Meara wins Crosby invitational despite damp course and pressure

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Mark O'Meara turned back a multiple-man challenge with three gritty, par-saving putts down the stretch and scored a one-shot victory yesterday in the 44th Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

O'Meara, the No. 2 money-winner on the PGA Tour last season, had to work hard for his closing round of 73, one over par on the rain-dampened Pebble Beach Golf Links.

The 28 year old led by only one shot most of the way on greens that were subject to week-long criticism from the touring pros. O'Meara sank a par putt of about six feet on the 15th and hit another 6-footer on the 16th for par and sole possession of the lead.

On the 17th, a long par-3 that juts into the surf of Carmel Bay, O'Meara put his tee ball into a buried lie in a left bunker. Overshooting the hole by 12 feet, he sank the putt to keep the lead.

Finishing with a par-5 on the scenic final hole, O'Meara scored the second victory of his career with a 283 total, five shots under par. It was worth $90,000 from the total purse of $500,000.

Curtis Strange, who played with O'Meara in the final group, missed a six foot putt on the 18th that would have forced a playoff.

Strange matched par 72 in the occasionally drizzling rain and tied for second at 284 with fast-closing Larry Rinker and 41-year-old Kikuo Arai of Japan.

Black history needs more than a month on U.S. calendars

America is no melting pot. Although your ninth-grade Civics textbook may have told you a different story, America does not blend diverse cultures into one homogeneous mixture.

A more accurate model for our culture — one endorsed by many sociologists — compares America to a salad bowl. In a salad bowl, each ingredient retains its identity, yet contributes to the greater whole — the salad.

In America, each cultural group retains its own identity. Its customs, arts and history should be preserved.

For that reason, February is an important month for American culture. It's Afro-American History Month. Some would argue that history — like the Constitution — should be color-blind. That's true, it should be. But it isn't. Too often, American history has been written unfairly. It's all there in black and white — with the accent on white.

To counter that situation, Afro-American History Month is not only necessary, it's vital. Without it, young blacks would be in danger of losing touch with their traditions. America, the great melting pot, would melt away their cultural background and assimilate them into a prefabricated society, cast in the image of the white, middle-class majority.

We should all look forward to the time when we won't need an Afro-American History Month. Perhaps there will come a day when every month of the year will focus on Afro-American history, along with Chinese-American history, American-Indian history and the history of all cultural groups in America.

But that day isn't this day. For now, society must work to change attitudes and preserve Afro-American History. If you want to help, check out some of the events on campus this month.

Tonight at 8, Nathaniel Pugh, a leading black educator, will speak on "The Future of the Black Family Beyond the Year 2000" in 220 Student Center. Pugh will also lead a workshop on "Enhancing Black Male/Female Relationships on a Predominantly White Campus" at 3 p.m. today in 206 Student Center. Tomorrow, he will speak on "The Survival of Black Faculty and Administrators at Predominantly White Colleges and Universities" at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Center Theater.

There will also be plays, videotapes, films and other lectures presented throughout the month. Phone the office of minority student affairs for more details.

Fantasy gaming is change for the better

"This game is one of shrewd and amusing trading and excitement. Brief Ideas of the Game The Rules of Monopoly

James A. STOLL

Gaming isn't what it used to be. It's getting better. Many argue that there is little value in playing board games, yet Monopoly devotes battle the dice and the Chance cards long into the night with nothing to show for it but an aching back. It might be true that there is no tangible benefit, but the cruel pleasure of bankrupting one's opponents outweighs the loss of a night's sleep. And now that businesses like Parker Brothers can make a handsome profit (they would have had a time of it in caveman days), it is not surprising that they market a lot of new games. Some of them, inevitably, will stink. But despite the wash of new ideas, new technologies and new plastics, the best ideas are the ones that stir the imagination. Monopoly — tried and true — always seems to generate a feeling of capitalistic pillaging, a sadistic satisfaction that can only come from wiping out your family and friends with your hotels on Boardwalk or Park Place. That's why the best idea in modern gaming is the concept used in Dungeons and Dragons. Fantasy gaming, as it is called, only begins with D & D — there are many variations. But D & D is the kind of game that takes no electricity, no complicated game board and no practice — just imagination. I have played D & D and it is a wonderful game. The idea is to revert to the child's game of "Pretend Like." The Dungeon Master sets the scene and describes the action. Each person creates and "plays" a character in the group — the player merely speaks and his character is in action. From the files of Antares McDougal, my first character, a thief: We were lost in the lower caverns, our guide slain by the merciless Dragon that even now loomed over us. The courageous Mr. Bill, our fighter, lay wounded and dying on the ground, his two-handed sword a broken toy at his side. Doctor Sunshine was conjuring again, hurling his last magic missile at the unscathed Dragon, who even then was rearing back, drawing in a deep breath with which he certainly planned to roast us, each and every one. There was no way out. "Hey, You!" I yelled in my best and most respectful Dragonese. "Wanna make a deal?" The beauty of D & D is that this kind of nonsense can work. The whole idea is to get into it, and winning or losing has little relevance. After a few all-nighters, Antares McDougal has become a 10th level thief and has built his own hideout. He hoards a massive amount of gold, keeps an army on retainer and is even learning to do some magic. Monopoly — with all due respect — was never like this. Editorial Editor James A. ## Off-campus housing takes various forms Anthropologists contend man's ancestors moved out of their caves so they could pursue a nomadic way of life, chasing around herds of dinosaur, saber-toothed Koala bears and other vicious prehistoric furry reptilians. Bunk. The first free-standing apartment-dwellers were college students who couldn't afford to live in safe, secure, climate-controlled caves. Man might still live in caves if these hasty scholars hadn't stuck it out and evolved — and if you think we have it rough nowadays, imagine trying to pass HIS 101 when history didn't even exist yet.

Contributing COLUMNIST

ple" may be nothing more than students in between homes. Some students solve the problem by renting out "day rooms," "efficiencies" and "student apartments" so small that you couldn't even open the doors of a Honda in them. Next, they have their entire high school graduating class move in with them to defray costs. Parents worry that their children may go ape once out on their own, throwing wild parties and inviting members of the opposite sex over for contentions exhibits. Nothing could be further from the truth. Parents don't realize an overcrowded apartment is the greatest birth control device invented since the chastity belt, because it's hard to get romantic with four other people in the room. Parties also present a problem as it's usually standing room only when just the roommates are home, and you can't get a keg if there's no place to put it. So tell Mom and Pop to relax. Another category of student housing is the "Fixer-Upper." "Tearer-Downer" would be more appropriate. These are the type of houses you expect to see in movies like "It Lurked in the Basement" or "Midnight Flesh Feast of the Mutant Rats." The floors always creak when you walk around — due to their age — and many times I've wondered if the toilet really sank when I did, or if it was the result of an overworked imagination. I've stopped eating Mexican food just in case. A friend of mine moved into one of these houses and I hope he got a good deal. He's moved his bed to the opposite side of the room because the back bedroom wall is falling down. "But it's got great location!" he insists. If UK really had such great location, the Webb brothers would build a navigable river through main campus.

Apparently, some students have chosen to go mobile — they have clothes rods stretched across their backseats, usually crammed full of various business attire. I've yet to see black lacy negligees or bikini underwear with "Stud" written on them hanging from these rods, though. This advantageous set-up offers the ultimate in low cost housing — no furniture to buy, no lawn to maintain, no dishes to wash and as Pete Townsend sang, "I can stop at any street, invite in people that we meet . . . watch the police and the taxman miss me, I'm mobile. . . ." I really like this concept, and since I've got a parking permit, I might try it myself — only one better. If I can scrounge up the cash flow, you can look for a white '83 International bus filled with the sound of typing in the lot behind Memorial Coliseum. After all, surely they wouldn't — they couldn't — tow a church bus. Would they? David Baker is a journalism senior.

LETTERS

Survival comes first

John Fischer calls himself a "rightist," one who believes in what is right, "but the closest he comes to defining his idea of 'right' is, 'The killing of humans is not right. That is why we have laws against it.'" It bothers me that John then goes on to recommend the outlawing of abortion and capital punishment on the basis of his logically sloppy presumption of the innate wrongness of killing. I'd like to ask everyone, especially John the Rightist, to consider for a moment just what "right" and "wrong" mean when used to describe an action such as rape, murder, etc. Try this experiment. Think of every type of behavior that people consider wrong or bad. Then mentally list behaviors we tend to think of as right or good.

You'll find that the outstanding feature of all "wrong" types of behavior is that if anyone did them whenever they wanted, we would never have survived as a species. Similarly, "right" or "good" behavior includes actions which can help us get along with one another and thus help us survive as the social species we are. Therefore, "wrong" describes actions which hinder the survival of our species, and "right" describes actions which help it. It's as simple as that. In conclusion, the point of this letter is not to give my views on abortion or capital punishment, but to ask everyone to re-evaluate all issues of right and wrong in light of the definitions I've given above, rather than the assumption of some innate rightness or wrongness. After all, close to the top of our list of wrongs for humans should be

"failing to think independently and use our minds to their full capacities." Jamie Gibbs Linguistics junior

'Weak' argument

Kevin R. Greene's argument against the pro-life movement's method of educating the public about abortion is weak, and I must respond. Closing one's eyes to unpleasantness does not change the fact that it exists or make it go away. The pictures of a hog being slaughtered do not change the fact that the hog died. Pictures of burnt and broken bodies do not change the fact that once those bodies were living human beings. Pictures of starving children in Ethiopia do not change the fact that many have died in Africa due to lack of food. And pictures of aborted children do not change the fact that once these children were alive and secure in their mother's womb. The sonogram of an abortion which is depicted in the film "The Silent Scream" does not change the fact that at the beginning of the film, the child is moving peacefully in her mother's uterus and at the end of it, is nothing more than a bodiless head that the abortionist must crush with his instruments in order to remove. What emotions one experiences when confronted with such pictures does not change what the pictures reveal. Closing one's eyes to the process of abortion will not make it disappear. And what did the physician who performed the abortion see in that sonogram that made him leave the room during the film editing session? What so moved him that he has not performed an abortion since? What did the film's narrator, Dr. Bernard N. Nathanson, learn that led him, as one of the founders of the National Abortion Rights Action League, to leave that group and join the pro-life movement? Dr. Nathanson once ran the busiest abortion clinic in the Western world and personally performed over 5,000 abortions. Could these two physicians (and countless other health professionals) have learned the truth about abortion, which is not based upon emotions, that it is murder? Jill Wiess Education graduate student

Budget

Halsey said: "I don't think everything mentioned will go, but I think there will be some changes. The president is committed to reducing the deficit."
Halsey said many different forms of campus-based financial aid programs exist to provide for needy students. These programs include National Direct Student Loans, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, work-study, Pell Grants and state grants.
"Students that have the greatest financial need are generally helped through those programs," he said. Students who borrow through the GSL program are usually ineligible for other programs or still have some need after receiving funds from other aid programs.
"If you cannot borrow under the new proposed budget, then you're just out," he said.
However, parents of students ineligible for the GSL program will be able to turn to auxiliary loan programs, but the interest on these loans are 3.5 percent above the interest on Treasury bills and repayments must begin immediately, Halsey said.

"You can see if the emphasis is going toward that, then the government is shying away from lower interest rates and considering a program that is almost the market rate of interest — not really that big of an advantage," he said.
Halsey said the GSL program is a costly one because the federal government must subsidize lending institutions up to the going rate of interest for the money students borrow at 9 percent interest.
"The government pays the interest for you until you graduate or leave school," Halsey said. "It costs the government big bucks."

"The government has money problems," he said. "He (President Reagan) kind of made some statements during the campaign that he wouldn't do certain things, like cut Social Security. So he's just trying to see what he can do. It's like tossing up a handful of chaff to see how the wind blows."
Despite the proposed cuts, the responsibility for financing a college education lies with the family, Halsey said. Part of the philosophy of financial aid is that students have some responsibility to work during the summer.
He said the real reason for federal financial aid is to provide students with the academic ability and desire the financial ability to go to college, even though their parents are incapable of supporting them.
"It's the families' responsibility to help students,"

Halsey said. "But planning is a very important factor in financing an education."
"I think people tend to procrastinate as long as they can," he said. "Then they start looking to other programs."
"We're concerned about the cuts, but we don't want parents and students to get upset."
Halsey encouraged students to seek out other available forms of financial aid.
He said students should complete aid applications as soon as possible. Applications have been available at the financial aid office since Jan. 28, and the deadline for submitting applications is April 15.
"But I would strongly encourage students to submit early," he said, because students who apply later may be limited in the amount of aid they can receive.

student code revision, but because the group was too liberal.
"I joined the UK Young Democrats with hopes of forming a conservative Democratic group on campus. . . . I feel that the chapter on campus today has hurt the Democratic party so much, that there is no way this organization will ever be able to make any progress on this campus," Strong wrote in his resignation letter, dated Jan. 1.
Brothers said she thought the amendment issue was among Strong's reasons for resigning, however. "It was pretty clear in his letter that we were way too liberal on the issue."
"I don't believe our national party agrees that we were moving too far to the left when we were supporting an anti-discrimination proposal," she said.
Brothers wrote Strong a letter, dated Feb. 1, accepting his resignation but expressing strong disapproval for his reasons. "It was the decision of our organization to endorse (the amendment) proposal," she wrote, "not as an unspoken endorsement of homosexuality but as a statement against discrimination — a pillar of the Democratic Party's platform."
Slack said he did not agree with the group's endorsement.
"I'm not a quitter," he said. "But you can't do it (run an organization) with split leadership. I believe everyone should have equal rights (but) it's an irrelevant issue."
He also said the group was taking up too much of his time. Although Slack said he might have stayed with the group if the amendment issue had not come up, he would have relinquished his office in any case.
The resignations came two days after the Student Government Association voted to endorse the amendment which would add the words "sexual orientation" to a list of characteristics that must be considered irrelevant when the University admits students or distributes financial aid.
A similar measure, one that would prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation in University grading policies, was passed without dissent by the University Senate Council last week and sent to the University Senate for approval. But the student code amendment still must be passed by the Student Code Revision Committee and then the Board of Trustees to be added to the handbook.
The departures of Slack and Strong leave the organization with three officers. Valerie Estes, vice president, and Chris Greenwell, treasurer, remain along with Brothers.

Prague concert offers opportunity to dispel misconceptions

Jiri Belohlavek conducts the Prague Symphony Orchestra.

The University Artist Series. Let's see. Since it happens at the Center for the Arts, it must have something to do with that highfalutin classical music, huh?

That must be where all the music professors and their eager young students go to talk about the majesty of the immortal Beethoven, the glory of Bach and God knows what else about composers you've never even heard of.

If that's what you think, then you don't know all there is to know about the Artist Series.

You may already know about the Prague Symphony Orchestra concert tomorrow night at the Center for the Arts. Perhaps you've heard that the Prague ranks among the world's greatest orchestras.

What you probably didn't know is that students get a hefty discount on ticket prices for this show, as well as for all other shows in the University Artist Series.

In fact, students can attend these concerts at nearly half the regular ticket price charged to the general public.

According to a recent survey conducted by a Marketing 340 class—a non-scientific poll which was nonetheless thorough and interesting—nearly half of the UK student body is unaware of the discount prices available to them.

The lowered ticket prices may not be the only misconception students have about these concerts. Contrary to popular belief, the Artist Series is attended by a wide variety of concert-lovers.

Sure, there are the typical patrons dressed in academic tweeds who discuss the finer points of classical music during intermission.

But right next to the academic types you're likely to find some of your classmates, the same ones you may have seen a few nights before at a rock concert.

And despite what you may have heard, there is neither an implied nor explicit dress code for classical concerts. You'll find outfits at these concerts to be as diverse as the campus population itself.

If you're not convinced, tomorrow night you have an excellent chance to see what the Artist Series is all about, when the Prague Symphony Orchestra brings its tradition of excellence to the Center for the Arts.

Founded in 1924, the Prague Symphony originally worked in film as well as on the concert stage, and attained enough artistic and social significance to become attached to the City Council of Prague in 1952.

Conductor Jiri Belohlavek will lead the orchestra in a program including Tchaikovsky's Pathétique Symphony No. 6 in B minor, Op. 74, excerpts of which have been used in more than a few movies, cartoons and even TV commercials.

The Prague Symphony will also perform Dvorak's "Concerto in B minor for Cello, Op. 104" and Glinha's Overture from "Russian and Ludmila."

The concert begins at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the Concert Hall of the Center for the Arts. Tickets are only $8 for students while the general public pays $14, available at the Center for the Arts ticket window between noon and 4 p.m. today and tomorrow. Visa and MasterCard are accepted. For more information, call 257-4929.

Let's Active scheduled for a Valentine's Day performance

By KAKIE URCH
Staff Writer

Mitch Easter's one regret about his band Let's Active is the name Let's Active.

The confusing name is a play on a Japanese misuse of English verbs, but the music is a creative use of American moods, expressed with Easter's Todd Rundgren/Buddy Holly hybrid guitar licks.

Easter also noted for his production efforts with such progressive American groups as R.E.M., Pylon and the Individuals and the Bongos, is the frontman for Let's Active, which will play in the Student Center Ballroom in a Valentine's Day show sponsored by the Student Activities Board concert committee.

Let's Active is one of the plethora of original groups coming out of the Southeast. R.E.M., The B-52's, and the Bongos are a few of Let's Active's musical and geographic contemporaries.

The dB's, who will open the Let's Active show in the Ballroom, are another of what Easter calls the "whole new batch of American bands that count now."

Let's Active's album, Cypress, on I.R.S. Records has received reviews that indicate that Let's Active is also an American band that counts.

Rolling Stone gave Cypress a four-star rating.

pulsing tune that makes one think of a more directed R.E.M. "Blue Line" has received airplay on college stations nationwide.

Let's Active has opened shows for Echo and The Bunnymen and R.E.M., but is still building recognition slowly, possibly due in part to their confusing name. Easter has said, "It would have been so much easier if we'd been the Butthole Surfers."

Tickets for the February 14 show, which will begin at 8 p.m., are on sale now at the Student Center Ticket Window. Tickets are $8.

From Staff and AP reports

LSU honors Singletary

President Otis A. Singletary has been inducted into the Louisiana State University Alumni Hall of Distinction.

LSU alumni federation president William Terry said the annual induction program is aimed at recognizing former LSU students "who have made significant contributions to society and whose achievements have brought credit and distinction to LSU."

Singletary received both his master's and doctorate degrees from LSU.

Only 43 alumni have been so honored. Singletary received the recognition at a ceremony at LSU Friday.

Black lecture rescheduled

An article in Friday's Kentucky Kernel stated the incorrect time and place for one of the lectures during the University's celebration of Afro-American History Month.

Nathaniel Pugh's lecture on "The Survival of Black Faculty and Administrators at Predominantly White Colleges and Universities" has been rescheduled for 7:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Student Center Theater.

Budget proposal tops $900 billion

WASHINGTON — President Reagan will send Congress a $973.7 billion budget for the next fiscal year, just 1.5 percent above the current spending total, administration officials said yesterday.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the figure, while higher than projected spending for fiscal 1985, remains consistent with Reagan's effort to freeze overall spending for federal programs.

Although Speakes refused to confirm the total spending figure reported today by The New York Times, he told reporters he "wouldn't guide you off of it." Another official, when promised anonymity, said the number was accurate.

U.S. bomb victims airlifted

ATHENS, Greece — Thirteen injured U.S. servicemen and dependents, among the 69 Americans wounded when a bomb exploded in a crowded bar, were airlifted to a U.S. base in West Germany yesterday for treatment, U.S. and Greek officials said.

The explosion Saturday night injured 78 people and was the first reported terrorist attack on a facility frequented by U.S. military personnel in Greece. A caller to an Athens newspaper claimed responsibility for the blast, criticized U.S. policy and said attacks on Americans would continue.

Tutu becomes first black bishop

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Desmond Tutu, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, was enthroned yesterday as the first black Anglican bishop of Johannesburg after getting special permission to enter the white neighborhood where the ceremony took place.

Strict security measures were imposed at the ceremony after death threats were reported against Tutu.

In crawl spaces 60 to 52 feet high, hundreds of feet under the ground, and escaping an emergency situation can be difficult and frightening, Cole said.

"It's very complex," he said. "If you get lost down there in an emergency, one big problem is finding a way out of there. The miner has to remember the escape route. . . you have to know what to do if the escape route is blocked."

"There's air that is blown in to keep the dust and methane out and keep the oxygen in that you have to have. If the ventilation isn't there, the oxygen becomes oxidized and the air gets bad and you can asphyxiate. If the methane accumulates, it's bad for you but it could also blow up."

Currently, the self-rescue routine has as many as 15 steps.

"The most difficult thing is that you got to be able to decide what to do, there isn't any simple correct answer," Cole said.

Phillip Berger, of the J.W. Martin School of Public Administration and co-principal investigator of the project, and nine other experts from five UK colleges and eight departments are involved in the project.

Cole said the knowledge from the vast fields will be a benefit to the project.
