Walker said that he believed he could do both jobs effectively but decided to step down anyway.

"I didn't want any appearance of impropriety or conflict of interest," he said.

Walker, a business administration and law graduate student, said he believes that helping Dowdy become president would have have a lasting impact on UK.

"It's a bittersweet feeling," Walker said. "It has been a distinct pleasure serving as chief justice ... and I'm going to miss it."

Dowdy to run for SGA presidency

Fifth-year business management senior Lance Dowdy said he will officially enter the race for Student Government Association president today, the deadline for submitting petitions for candidacy.

Sociology senior Amber Leigh will be his running mate.

The ticket plans to formally announce its candidacy March 23 at 4:15 p.m. at the Delta Delta Delta social sorority house.

Dowdy, 22, a former president of Pi Kappa Alpha social fraternity, served as an SGA senator his freshman and sophomore years. He also has served as a member of Interfraternity Council for the past two years. Leigh, 21, has been the SGA Senate clerk for the past year and is a member of Chi Omega social sorority. Leigh ran an unsuccessful campaign last year for SGA senator.

Wilkinson testifies in nephew's trial

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Former Gov. Wallace Wilkinson testified yesterday that he appointed an arbitrator in a race track dispute without being influenced by his nephew, who was a top aide. He said that Bruce Wilkinson, who was his appointements secretary, "could very well have" compiled a list of possible appointees. "It would have been standard operating practice for him to do so," the former governor said. But he said "it was my idea" to eventually hire Linda Thomas, a partner in a Bowling Green law firm that supported him politically, Wallace Wilkinson said.

The government alleges that Bruce Wilkinson demanded $20,000 from Riverside Downs, a Henderson harness track, after claiming he fixed the arbitration in the track's favor.

Bruce Wilkinson, 40, of Richmond, was director of appointments to state boards and commissions throughout his uncle's administration, which ended in December 1991. He allegedly got the cash a month later from Jay Spurrier, a lobbyist and racing-industry power broker.

Clintons rebel against 'life in the bubble'

WASHINGTON — It was sunny and warm, and Bill Clinton was where he likes to be — out. Out of the White House and out with old friends — but not out of range of a gaggle of photographers.

He and wife Hillary Rodham Clinton still rebel sometimes against "life in the bubble" of presidential publicity. But on this walk to church he giggled, pointed at the photographers and said, "I don't even mind them that much today."

Friends say that the Clintons are getting used to living at the White House — or, as some of them call it, "the compound."

"I think despite all of this, they've really adjusted as well as any human being can adjust," said Chief of Staff Mack McLarty, who has known Clinton since kindergarten.

"Amos and Andrew"
Starring Nicolas Cage and Samu-el L. Jackson
Columbia Pictures

By Greg Laber

"Amos and Andrew," the new film starring Nicolas Cage and Samuel L. Jackson, wants desperately to be taken seriously as a hard-hitting film tacking contemporary issues. It also wants to make you laugh. This combination of comedy and drama is a tricky one. A few talent-de film-makers have been able to pull it off. In recent memory, Barry Levinson's "Good Morning, Vietnam" took on the somber war-time issues with a sense of humor and amazing good taste.

Lesser films, like "Amos and Andrew," cannot achieve this delicate balance. They shift from one scene to the next from preachy melodrama to ridiculous farce.

This film starts when Andrew, a wealthy black leader, moves into his ritzy home on an all-white is-land. His nosy neighbors (which aren't aware he has bought the house) see him installing his stereo and think he is stealing it. It's not long before the police are involved.

When the press shows up, the police chief sees an opportunity for national exposure. He turns his back on Amos and decides to treat him like a regular criminal. Before he knows what's going on, Amos finds himself making demands.

The notion of an everyday event turning into a national race scandal has been done before in "Bonfire of the Vanities." That film, which lacked the subtlety of Tom Wolfe's novel, suffered from many of the same problems as "Amos and Andrew."

Writer/director Max Frye chose to portray the characters with broad stereotypes. Neighbors Michael Lemer and Margaret Collin are potsmoking ex-hippies who never seem to know what's going on. Character actor Brad Dourif ("Exorcist 3") is wasted as a Barney File-style deputy who takes his job too seriously.

For all its good intentions and high ambitions, "Amos and Andrew" never quite gets off the ground. It's a film that tries to make you laugh while you cry. In the end, you won't do much of either.

"Amos and Andrew" is rated PG-13 and is showing at Lexington Green cinemas. Samuel L. Jackson and Nicolas Cage star in "Amos & Andrew," a social comedy about a black playwright and a crook.

ABC's 'Sirens' sounds off tonight

NEW YORK — Get past the lame title and "Sirens," the one-hour police drama debuting tonight on ABC, still is only preity good. It falls far short of its potential. The series is about three rookie policewomen starting out on the Pittsburgh PD, so the title refers to the warning device on emergency vehicles.

EDITORIAL

The Student Government Association Supreme Court met to dis-cuss the constitutionality of SGA President Pete November's executive order last week, which froze the senate's money

So why did the Court even meet?

In their complaint, the two senators ask for injunctive relief form the order, but November actually gave them their relief when he lifted the order. While November set a bad precedent with his actions, the court's hearing this case is an equally bad precedent.

The court cannot try a hypothetical case. There's no case now that November has lifted the order, and the court should have dismissed the case altogether.

University must wake up, face problems

_____ Large classes make success hard to attain

Bad, bad University.

You should be nicer to the stu dents with whom you play.

The students that you play with come to you for help. Your play-mates come to you for help, so treat them with dignity. You will probably have each playmate for four years or more.

University, you force your play-mates to endure several of your problems and eccentricities.

Problems and eccentricities.

You expand some of your classes to ungodly sizes in efforts to play with more students. You then expect some of your other playmates, the teachers, to suffer through your efforts to accommodate students. In these classes, all your playmates suffer. You eliminate any individual attention, which is a rarity many students would welcome and many teachers would love to offer — if it were possible.

Maybe more teachers and more abundant but smaller classes would help. Your playmates know you have budget cuts, but you also have a tuition hike to work with. University, please give us a break.

You give us some teachers that cannot play well with the material you give them. However, this is a teacher problem. The teachers should make classes interesting. Some of your servants do not care at all about the students because they know that for every student that leaves, there is usually another to take his or her place. They treat students as statistics. But, Universi-ty, you have instilled this attitude in your teachers.

in your teachers.

Whether you realize it or not, you are giving your students the same point of view. The Student Center speech last week by T.A. Jones for the Student Government Association presidency displayed this. The announcement was really just a shouting down of the poor souls like me caught in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Apparently, they forgot that more flies can be caught with honey than vinegar. The lunchroom tactic was a good idea, but it was carried out totally in the wrong way.

These two could have gone from table to table, introduced themselves, and gotten to know the voters in this election. Instead, they treated us as numbers instead of people. The University has taught its playmates well.

The University has not corrupted all its playmates. In classes with a bit more individual attention, like the English courses and many of the classes in the College of Fine Arts, some of the teachers still care about their pupils. However, this subspecies of playmate is quickly becoming extinct.

For its playmates who come from far away to play, University, you should give us a few more comforts of home in those things that you call residence halls. Mi-croFridges would be nice. (For those of you who do not know, a MicroFridge is a combination of a microwave and a refrigerator/ freezer. The University is considering supplying them in each room for a hike in room and board rates or renting them next year.)

Some of us think the good points of the University outweigh the bad ones. Others of us cannot leave because this is where we have our scholarships and/or this is the only in-state school that offers our majors.

Food prices should be lower, too. For these prices, the food made available to some of the athletes at places like Blazer Courtyard and Donovan Oak Room should be served to the little people, too. Or maybe the University does not think the rest of its playmates matter so much.

These are just some of the methods by which the University hurts its playmates. Some people would tell the unhappy playmates to leave. There are reasons why some of us

Some of us think the good points of the University outweigh the bad ones. Others of us cannot leave because this is where we have our scholarships and/or this is the only in-state school that offers our majors. We cannot afford to go out-of-state.

In any case, there is no reason why all the points cannot be made better.

University, you should realize that your playmates are more than just Social Security numbers in a computer. They are people with real lives of which you are a part. If you do not, conditions will only worsen.
