The Kentucky Alumnus

A QUARTERLY MAGAZINE DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF THE ALUMNI AND STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY

ALLEN GULLION

DIPLOMAT • LAWYER • SOLDIER • STATESMAN

A story, if it could be developed, lies behind the name of every true American of the present day. In some cases facts of historic value lie in the title that goes before the name. Such is the case of Major General Allen Wyant Gullion, a native of Carrollton, Ky., a graduate of the University of Kentucky with a degree in Law in 1914, and a resident of Washington, D. C., almost continuously since 1917. The narrative starts with the young cadet's graduation from West Point in 1905.

Recently General Gullion expressed the opinion that combatant soldiers, should get all the publicity the limited amount of space now available would allow. The Alumnus has practically dedicated its pages to men and women in the service since the present World War started, for it was realized that graduates and former students would necessarily take part and, in many instances, make the supreme sacrifice. The Alumnus will continue to do just that. However, there are men and women on our honor role who have not carried a weapon, piloted a plane or navigated a boat. They have their place also, and months ago General Gullion was selected as a subject of review.

Having acquired a classical degree at Centre College, in Danville, Ky., in 1901, Allen Gullion entered the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., and was graduated with a commission

General Gullion was relieved as provost marshal general of the Army, May 1, and at the same time was assigned to overseas duties and was decorated twice. To the Distinguished Service Medal which he won in the last war was added an Oak Leaf Cluster for his work as judge advocate general of the Army. The Legion of Merit was awarded for his work as provost marshal general.

of second lieutenant on June 13, 1905. He came to the University of Kentucky as Commandant and P. M. S. & T. in 1912, remaining until the close of the academic year in 1914. Having matriculated in the Law College, after locating in Lexington, Commandant Gullion earned his LL.D. from his state University. An honorary degree was conferred on General Gullion in 1935 by the University of Hawaii; in 1939 by Centre College and in 1942 by the University of Kentucky.

In 1916 he had advanced to the rank of colonel, and he was assigned to duty on the Mexican border. A year later he was called to Washington as Chief, Mobilization Division, of the National Selective Service and in 1918, his country having entered the World War, he was sent to Germany and France as Judge Advocate, 3rd Corps, A.E.F.

It was in 1923 that Colonel Gullion was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for work in selective service and mobilization. The citation read: "In national administration of the selective service law from May 4, 1917, to March 26, 1918, as chief of publicity and information under the provost marshal general he successfully conducted the campaign to popularize selective service. Later as acting executive officer to the provost marshal general he solved many intricate problems with firmness, promptness and common sense. Finally, as the first chief of mobilization division of the provost marshal general's office he supervised all matters related to the marking and filing of calls and the accomplishment of individual inductions. To each of his varied and important duties he brought a high order of ability and remarkable powers of application. His services were of great value in raising our National Army."

Colonel Gullion's ability in law and military service have designed and directed his interesting career. Continuing in various connections with the office of Judge Advocate, he was in 1919 in Washington on the general staff; from 1920 to 1924 he was advisor to General Bullard, Governors Island and Judge Advocate, 2nd Corps Area; as Senior War Department representative he went to the Geneva Conference on Prisoners of War and Red Cross in 1929; was Judge Advocate, Hawaiian Department, 1932 to 1937; N. R.A. Administrator, Hawaiian Territory, 1933-1935; Assistant Judge Advocate General and Act-

GRADUATION

When this issue of the Alumnus reaches members of the Association we will be preparing on the Campus for June graduation exercises at which approximately 250 will receive degrees. Many of those whose names might have been on the program have postponed their studies until after the present conflict is ended. Assurance that many of them will return to the classroom comes in letters received weekly.

Summer quarter classes will be continued this year, but it impossible to estimate the enrollment at this time.

As the program on the opposite page will show this year's exercises will begin with the baccalaureate sermon by Dr. Homer Carpenter, on Sunday afternoon, May 28, and the graduation will be Friday night, June 2, with Dr. Milton Eisenhower, president of Kansas State College, delivering the Commencement address.

President and Mrs. Donovan will entertain trustees, faculty, alumni, seniors and friends at tea on Thursday afternoon, June 1, at Maxwell Place, and the commencement

Trustees Approve Plan To Honor U. Of K. Founders

The establishment of an annual Founders Day, honoring the men and women who have made great contributions to the building of the University of Kentucky, and the designation of the date as Feb. 22, the day on which, in 1865, the Kentucky General Assembly approved a bill establishing the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Kentucky University, has been approved by the University Board of Trustees, on the recommendation of President H. L. Donovan.

"From time to time members of this board have suggested that the University should have a Founders Day program each year," said the President's recommendation, "and the suggestion has appealed to me as one having a great deal of merit. Many men and women have made great contributions to the building of this institution, and a proper appreciation of their work should prove to be a matter of inspiration for those who have the privileges and opportunities of attending the University. The University has existed long enough for us to have pride in its history, and a desire to familiarize the on coming generation with its traditions, trials, tribulations, and accomplishments."

The president's recommendation pointed out the contributions made by John Bowman, "who initiated and inspired a few leaders in education with a vision of a university not equaled in his day, and I doubt if it has been surpassed in this. He secured state legislation and funds sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the federal government for the establishment of an Agricultural and Mechanical College."

He indicated the contributions made by John A. Williams, Robert Peter, Desha Pickett, James K. Patterson and others, and said, "how well they did their work is attested by the growth of the University."

President H. L. Donovan Outlines Essential Items in University Needs

H. L. DONOVAN

It is our desire to keep the alumni thoroughly informed regarding their Alma Mater and its activities. For this reason I wish to give you a brief statement respecting our financial status for the next biennium.

When Governor Willis submitted his budget to the General Assembly in January, he recommended approximately a ten per cent increase in our budget for operation and maintenance. Had the budget bill been enacted, the University would have been on a sound financial basis for the next biennium. However, since no budget was passed by the Legislature, the budget of the University for the next biennium will be the budget adopted by the General Assembly in January, 1942, less all appropriations in that budget which are marked for extraordinary expenses. These appropriations are not repeated according to an interpretation of the Attorney General's office, for the biennium 1944-46. This means that the University will receive during the next biennium $520,000 less than it has received during the present biennium, which will close June 30, 1944. For a number of years there has been in the budget an item called extraordinary expenses, made up of Library Equipment $20,000; Scientific Laboratory Equipment, $40,000; Engineering Equipment, $40,000; Home Economics Equipment, $20,000, for the biennium. These items are essential if the University is to maintain its standing among institutions of its class. There was also an item of $40,000 for the biennium for capital outlay which will not be repeated in the budget for 1944-46.

The University has lost approximately 2,300 students since the opening of hostilities. This means a loss of fees of from $225,000 to $250,000 annually, or $450,000 to $500,000 for the biennium. The combined total loss from state revenue and student fees will amount to approximately $1,000,000 for the next biennium. No university can endure such a staggering blow and maintain its standing among reputable universities.

I believe the alumni and the public should be thoroughly conscious of what is happening to the University's financial program. I have attempted to present the facts here in a nut shell.

During the past year we have had a contract with the Army which has enabled us to secure Federal funds sufficient to make up the deficit which we would have sustained this year through the loss of student fees. The Army has practically discontinued its educational program and there are but few soldiers left at the University. Consequently, the University will receive a mere pittance from this source. The problem is a serious one for the University and for the State, far more serious than I have been able to make the public realize.

The only way I see that this financial plight in which the University finds itself today can be corrected is for the Governor to include the University in his call for a special session of the Legislature, and for the General Assembly to provide adequate funds for the maintenance and operation of the University during the next biennium.

There may be those who think that because the University has lost a large number of students that the cost of its maintenance and operation can be reduced proportionately. This cannot be done without wrecking the University for the future. If professors and other staff members should be dropped at the present time because there are fewer students, it would require years to re-establish an adequate teaching staff. Universities cannot operate as a factory. It takes many years to assemble a well-educated teaching staff. Research is one of the important functions of a university, second in importance only to teaching. In time of war it can easily be regarded as the most important function of a university. Research can go on and is going on at the University, and must be continued during this period. When the professor is not teaching a full load he is giving all of his time in search of new truths, which are of inestimable value to society.

Half of the cost of the University and of the time of the staff is devoted to adult education and services requested by adults. The war has increased the amount of time and energy devoted to this phase of the University's work. This is more important now than ever. The adult education program must carry on during the next biennium.

The University will undoubtedly have before the next biennium closes an enrollment larger than it has ever had heretofore. If we enter the biennium with a reduced budget it will be tragic for the University when the soldier's begin to return after the war and we are unable to serve them.

The University is asking for the budget which Governor Willis recommended to the General As-

The Library Wants Your Material

By T. D. CLARK

One of the richest assets the University of Kentucky could possess is a fine collection of documentary materials in its library. Kentucky is an old state relatively and there are literally thousands of pieces of manuscripts, letters, diaries, journals, account books, newspapers and pamphlets stored in family depositories, in attics, in basements and in business houses. This is a rich source for study of the state's heritage, and if it could only be brought together it would do much to save for future generations the proud history of our people. We have at the University of Kentucky a fire-proof library building with built-in vaults in which we can give protection to valuable papers, and we have a trained staff to care for them.

Many American universities are great because their alumni have understood clearly that great research collections were necessary, and they have given their schools the materials and the means by which these things have been acquired. It adds greatly to the prestige of a graduate of the University of Kentucky to have his school listed as one of the really fine depositories of excellent source materials. It adds greatly to the prestige of Kentuckians to have it said that they have gone about the task of preserving the records of their state and culture with intelligence. Many times an alumnus of the University of Kentucky would do his school great service if he only knew what to do. The University wants every sort of record that in any way tells the story of American civilization. This means that personal letters, business records, letters from soldiers in any war, diaries, books from old private libraries, old files of newspapers, old relics, in short, anything that reflects the life of the

DR. T. D. CLARK

American people are valuable to us. Oftentimes people have a habit of saying "I haven't anything worth giving to the University Library. I never made history, and the Library couldn't possibly be interested in my papers." Let some trained person from the University decide this matter for you. Don't be self-effacing because you are a common-place everyday American citizen, we all are, and our history is the mainspring history of the Republic.

Former Kentucky Governor Joins Reynolds Metal Co.

Keen Johnson of Richmond, Kentucky, former governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, former president of the Alumni Association and member of the executive committee of the Association at the present time, joined the Reynolds Metal Company on January 1 of this year. As assistant to the president he will co-ordinate a program to guard against the unemployment emergency that threatens when peace comes, R. S. Reynolds, company president, has said. His headquarters are in Washington, D. C.

Keen Johnson, who was graduated from the University in 1922, after having served during World War I overseas, became one of Kentucky's outstanding journalists, editor and publisher, and in 1935 was elected lieutenant governor and was elevated to the Governor's chair when Governor Chandler resigned in October. In November the vote of the people made Mr. Johnson governor and he retired from that position at the expiration of his term, December 7, 1943.

The Reynolds Company operates 40 plants which employ more than 28,000 persons in 14 states. In selecting Mr. Johnson, Mr. Reynolds said that there is a need for a man who knows national and state problems as well as industrial problems to aid in creating jobs for returning soldiers and for retaining those now in the company plants. "Governor Johnson's wide experience in public work has equipped him for the tremendous task of taking care of the returning men," Mr. Reynolds added.

U. K. COACH NAMED TO "HALL OF FAME"

ADOLPH F. RUPP

Adolph F. Rupp, who for the last 14 years has served as head basketball coach at the University of Kentucky, has been elected to the Helms Athletic Foundation Collegiate Basketball Hall of Fame, according to information issued by the Foundation.

The citation states that "Rupp took a group of freshmen players, just out of high school, and directed them to 19 victories in 20 games played this year. It was one of the outstanding achievements of the 1944 basketball season."

Over a 14-year period at Kentucky, Rupp's teams have won 230 games and lost 57. In Southern and Southeastern Conference play, Rupp's teams have made an outstanding record, winning 87 and losing only 16. His teams have won the Southeastern Conference title seven times and tied for the title once.

COUNCIL DAY PLANNED AT U. K.

A United National Council Day, which will be recognized all over the United States, will be observed on the University campus. The purpose is to find whether the general public approves of having a united council of Christian organizations at this time.

Rebecca Van Meter Writes That Her Name Is 'Kentucky' In New Zealand

"Letters from home," are what Rebecca Van Meter, University of Kentucky '32, now with the American Red Cross in New Zealand, craves most, according to communications from the former University student, which come back to the campus.

Rebecca, or "Becky" as she was known to hundreds of University students during her four years of college life, was social director of the Student Union from 1939 through February, 1943. In April, 1943 she entered the overseas service of the American Red Cross in the field of hospital recreation, took a four weeks' course of training in Washington, D. C., followed by a very brief period of practical experience in a hospital in this country, and sailed in June of last year from San Francisco, for an overseas assignment.

Her first stitch was served in Australia, where she remained for about six weeks before receiving her assignment to New Zealand. She arrived in New Zealand with short-snorter status and was attached to a Naval Mobile Hospital.

The corps of Red Cross workers, of which Rebecca is one, consists of four girls who live on the compound and work there with the convalescent patients in the hospital and in a recreation hall especially designed and built for their needs. Her letters are full of enthusiasm for her work and appreciation of the hospitality of the natives who open their homes to the Americans and are anxious to do everything in their power to help them in their work. Such pleasant relationships of course, make the effort of the Red Cross work smoother and more effective, and "far from anything you could call work," according to the Kentucky girl.

"I have not run up on a familiar face yet, but have come in contact with many Kentuckians," Becky relates. "I have not yet met a soul I have really known before but of course Kentuckians stick together whether they have known each other before or not. And I am sure we talk more than the others. I am known by most of the patients as 'Kentucky,' whether they know my name or not. They just call out, 'Hey, Kentucky!' Letters from home mean the most, to the Kentucky expatriate, but anything marked 'Made in the USA' is the joy of everyone's heart."

Miss Van Meter's address is, American Red Cross, Naval Mobile Hospital No. 6, Care Fleet Postoffice, San Francisco, Calif.

sembly in January. This means that it is requesting approximately ten per cent more for maintenance and operation, which is about $132,000 annually, over the 1942-44 budget. The University is not requesting any funds for capital outlay. It had in its budget for the past biennium $400,000 for capital outlay for this purpose. If we should receive the amount of money recommended by Governor Willis for the operation and maintenance of the University, we would receive during the next biennium approximately $136,000 less from the State than we have received during the current biennium. Is it not reasonable to assume that this loss in the income of the University for the next biennium is our proportionate part of any program of economy which the State may deem necessary at this time?

Joe Clifton Serving On Aircraft Carrier

JOE CLIFTON

Joseph Clinton Clifton, of Paducah, Ky., has been the subject of some interesting feature stories lately because of service on an aircraft carrier. On the November 5 Rabaul raid, one of the most successful carrier attacks of the war, Fighting Squadron Leader Jumpin' Joe Clifton told the bomber and torpedo boys that his fighters would take them in, hold off the Japs, and bring the torpedo boys back. And he did as he promised. News reports of the day said that despite a Jap force of 75 to 100 planes, the fighters took the torpedo and bomber planes in to attack the large Jap fleet in Simpson Harbor. They held the Japs off while great damage was inflicted, then brought the raiders out again, having shot down 24 and perhaps 42 enemy planes. One torpedo plane and one American fighter were lost to anti-aircraft batteries.

Joe Clifton was a freshman student in the University before entering the United States Naval Academy.

Metallurgical Engineers at U. K. Develop Pilot Plant for Coal

By C. S. CROUSE, Head
Department of Mining and Metallurgical Engineering

Another factor that comes into the picture is the question of smoke abatement and smoke elimination ordinances. The production of smoke on the combustion of coal is indefensible from two standpoints: first, it represents an uneconomic use of vital raw material, coal, and a direct loss of carbon and various by-products which are recoverable and, secondly, it produces a very definite health hazard and a dirt problem which is costly both to the individual and to the municipality. The statistical figures on soot fall in industrial communities are almost unbelievable.

As a result of the second item mentioned many of our cities had passed or were about to pass stringent smoke abatement ordinances when the war broke out. These laws would have forced the coal operators to do something about the situation or else run the risk of losing many of their markets and although for the most part they are not being strictly enforced during the war period this is, nevertheless, a situation which the coal industry will certainly have to face after the war is over.

There are two ways in which to approach this problem of smoke elimination. One is to burn the coal in apparatus properly designed and engineered for smokeless combustion and the other is to produce, from coal, by proper processing, a fuel which will be inherently smokeless. Both methods will undoubtedly be utilized but it is certain that the second method will provide more consistently favorable results and at the same time conserve valuable by-products which would otherwise be wasted.

Considering the problem from another angle I will quote from an article appearing in the April, 1943, issue of Coal Age. This article was written by Harold L. Ickes, who in addition to being Secretary of the Interior is also Petroleum Administrator and Solid Fuels Coordinator and as such should have the pertinent facts and data at his command.

Mr. Ickes says in part, "Outstanding among drastic changes the present world conflict is bringing about in our way of living is the use of coal on a scale and for purposes never before seriously considered, even in its heyday as the nation's overwhelmingly predominant source of fuel and energy.

... "Many of the innovations and extensions in the future use of coal will stem from progressive diminishment of this country's oil reserves and the resultant increasing need of a substitute source from which petroleum like products can be made. Others will be logical outgrowths of expediencies thrust upon us by the war.

"It requires no seer to foretell that the day is approaching when petroleum must be supplemented as an industrial and domestic fuel and as a source of gasoline. For the past several years petroleum consumption has been greatly in excess of the discovery of new reserves. For this reason it is prudent to look to coal and oil shale as sources of liquid fuel. I do not anticipate that a great quantity of liquid fuel made from coal or oil shale will be needed to make up for natural petroleum deficiencies within the next few years. But when and as it is needed we should be ready to produce it in whatever quantities are required. Again, as petroleum reserves diminish, plastics, chemicals, and explosives will be derived from coal in increasing quantities.

"It is already known to all industrial chemists that gasoline and other petroleum products may be obtained from coal and lignite by both direct and indirect hydrogenation. Both processes were invented and first put into commercial scale production in Germany. . . . In the United States, where the delusion of inexhaustible petroleum resources lingers tenaciously, we have been able, so far, to make only a gesture toward solving the liquid fuel problems that inevitably will be ours if additions to our known reserves keep on diminishing at the present rate, to say nothing of the difficulties we may encounter if that pace becomes accelerated." So writes Mr. Ickes.

It would appear certain that one result of the nation's present synthetic rubber program is going to be a new market for coal. The major raw materials for this substance are styrene and butadiene. The former is derived from coal and although butadiene at the present time is being recovered principally from petroleum and alcohol it can, and undoubtedly will, be made from coal as our petroleum supplies diminish.

Finally, in weighing the value of coal processing we must consider the economic advantages resulting from the production in a single plant of such a range of products as motor fuel, lubricating oils, raw materials for rubber, plastics, explosives, pharmaceutical chemicals, dyes and organic chemicals.

Bearing all of these facts in mind and feeling that anything done for the coal industry in Kentucky would benefit everyone in the State and also having knowledge of the research work already done at the University over a period of many years with the low temperature treatment of coal and other carbonaceous materials, the General Assembly, two years ago, appropriated the sum of $7,500 for each year of the biennium in order to further this work. Later the University made funds available for the construction of a building to house the contemplated pilot plant and still later the Governor released $10,000 for equipment and operating expenses. The result has been that at the present time, January 1944, the building has been completed and a large part of the necessary equipment is on hand.

However, due to the difficulty of obtaining certain materials during these times most of the necessary castings have had to be made and machined in the laboratories of the College of Engineering. This has taken time but everything is now well under way and it is expected that this pilot plant, the only one of its kind, will be in operation in the not far distant future.

I think that it is agreed that there are two general types of research. The first, for want of a better term, might be called fundamental research. This constitutes an inquiry into the basic and underlying reasons for certain occurrences and does not necessarily have to have any apparent economic or useful application nor is the time element of accomplishment a factor. The second type could be called spot research. In this instance, the attempt is to develop something for a particular and immediate use and the time element is usually extremely important. The examination of underlying principles is often subordinate to immediate results in spot research and this is the type that is emphasized and pressed to completion in times such as those through which we are passing.

Actually of course each of these general methods of research embodies more or less of the other type and such is the case with our coal research. We hope and expect to develop something of immediate value and use, which is the short range angle, but at the same time we will also endeavor to discover the fundamental answers inherent in the process or processes developed. This is the long range viewpoint and in the last analysis probably the more important. Our plans are well laid, based on work already accomplished and data obtained but what ramifications we will be led into as the work progresses or where we will end we cannot, of course, foresee.

So I will end where I began. Coal is our one great source of cheap carbon without which our present civilization cannot continue. It surely behooves us to utilize it scientifically and conserve its potentialities and this, in brief, expresses the reasons for the work that we have done on this problem and that that we propose to do in the future.
