Suspected Kidnaper Assumes "Poker Face" On Witness Stand

MRS. HAUPTMANN IS PRESENT AT TRIAL
Under Cross-examination He Admits Lying to Police

New York, Oct. 15 (INS)—Bruno Richard Hauptmann, denied on the witness stand this afternoon that he had killed little Charles A. Lindbergh Jr., he also declared he knew nothing of the kidnaping of the infant.

Neatly attired in a gray suit and tan shirt and minus a tie, the pale, poker-faced Hauptmann walked steadily to the witness chair. He put his hand on the Bible and swore that he would "tell the truth, the whole truth, so help me God."

He stared straight ahead. His Hauptmanns sat there, his wife, who a few minutes before had left the stand, strained to catch his eye. She had taken a seat among the spectators. She lifted her right hand and waved to her husband. But apparently he did not see her. His sharp, drawn face wore a concentrated expression. He was clean-shaven. His hands lay folded in his lap. He seemed to be calm enough. Before he started testifying he wiped his lips with a handkerchief.

Under cross-examination by Wilentz, Hauptmann made a number of admissions that he had lied to the police. He denied he ever built a ladder in his nine years he had worked in this country as a carpenter.

He had claimed that on the night the kidnaping he left his home in the Bronx about 6 or 7 in the evening and went to the Christian Brothers' school, a building in the Bronx where his wife worked, then took her home. He said he spent the night at the baby's apartment in his own home in New York City.

He admitted he had secreted a Beretta pistol in his home and garage and that he had a small pistol in the garage. He admitted he found on the premises had been left on the hall in his safekeeping by Isador Fisch who since died in Germany of tuberculosis.

WEAR THOSE CAPS! A time honored tradition, kept alive at the University for many years, has not been disposed of, as many Kentuckians had feared. We refer to the wearing of caps by freshmen male students, a custom that has long prevailed on the campus and one that has been accepted as a significant part of student life.

The Men's student council, governing body, has required that all freshmen students must purchase and wear the customary blue and white caps again this year. In cooperation with the action, each of the 18 social fraternities on the campus has made the ruling compulsory on the part of pledges. Any freshmen violating the rule will be brought before the council to answer charges against them. To be successful, it is necessary that the order be strictly enforced.

The purpose of the decree is not to make freshmen students feel subservient to the upperclassmen, but is designed for their own benefit as well as for upholding a convention of the school. A spirit of friendliness may be developed among first year students, who otherwise have no opportunity for making the acquaintance of members of their class. It is also hoped that by this action school spirit will be fostered and the feeling of comradeship strengthened. In years past the froth cheering section at games has been the nucleus of enthusiasm; why not this season?

Freshmen, wear those caps! You represent the largest single group on the campus and, as a consequence, can do more toward promoting interest in our University than any other class or organization. Help defend the traditions of Kentucky! It is your duty and responsibility.

SOMETHING UNIQUE This afternoon on the University campus, something really unique will occur.

Twenty-eight women will pause in their duties as farm wives, come into the training school auditorium, and present an operetta for the entertainment of the Homemakers Association of Fayette county.

Unique? Yes—not in its actual production, but in the unselfconscious attitudes, an dthe spirit of willingness which prompted these women to cooperate with their director, and the lack of experience and training preceding its rehearsals.

For college students, it is no uncommon event to appear in public. We have been grounded in the fundamental theories of music and public speaking, and since the time of our grammar school days we have performed before audiences without undue qualms.

The women who will entertain this afternoon have never been taught even the most basic principals of music and dramatic art. Yet, aware of their liabilities, they have practiced faithfully for several months, and are now prepared to present a program to an audience of their most pleasurable critics—other women of the community.

When the curtain is drawn at the close of the performance, 28 women will pack play their costumes, and return to their farm homes, and the farm duties which they postponed for an afternoon.

A CONVOCATION EXCEPTION

Once again, the University has been fortunate in engaging Dr. S. Parker as one of its general convocation speakers. He will deliver his address at 11 a. m. on Thursday morning to a large assembly—if the student body can be credited with recognizing the most outstanding speakers on vital topics in the country today.

It borders on the trite to inform the readers of this publication of the prominence of Dr. Cadman, but to those who may have lost contact with his nation-wide activities, he represents the American Federation of Churches. His radiocasts over coast-to-coast networks have gained him national prominence through their sheer forcefulness and masterful presentation. Dr. Cadman's diction and methods of delivery are not only admirable, but they bring forth the true beauty of the English language.

Those who attend this address will not hear a religious discussion composed of stock topics together with dressed-up stereotype arguments in behalf of religious beliefs. They will hear frank, red-blooded answers to the thing about which they have been pondering for several years. Thursday's convocation will be the true "convocation exception," to use a student term. Let's all attend and show the University authorities that we know when to take advantage of a real opportunity to gain important knowledge.

STUDENT OPINION

Dear Editor: During my life on the University campus I have heard "Hall, Kentucky, Alma Mater" not more than four times outside of Matriculation Lecture meetings. Why isn't this beautiful and expressive song sung more than it is? Is it because, whenever there is a gathering the leaders fear that the words aren't known well enough? This is true in many instances. Perhaps I don't fully understand the meaning and purpose of the song, but I believe there is one time when it certainly should be sung. Would it be too risky for SAE to ask the student body to remain in the stands long enough after each football game to sing the song that should be so well loved by each student? Or would the other side of the stadium discover that we don't know our own Alma Mater? Regardless of the final score, the squad is due some tribute and the time is excellent for proclamation of loyalty, whether in defeat or victory. —D. R.

Campus Philosophy Wonder what pledge students of good old Kentucky Alma Mater really would choose for activities if they had their choice? The sad part about the story is that those "meek, humble pledges" break their necks and other parts of the anatomy getting into organizations that they don't care two snaps about. I agree that they should be active, but why make them—let them select their own happiness. You know what you want, Freshmen, and with guidance, go out and get it!

But on the other hand, if you don't try to be "in the know" on the campus in the field of activities, my, my young students, will become definitely out—in fact, as far as your social life is concerned, "nil" will be sufficient capacity.

Petite Piece

Sometime when you're in the vicinity of Lime and Main streets, and providing that you can stand the little smell, go on the street and take a look into that trench that's open. You'll see the ruins of an old archway that supported the bridge that used to run down alongside of the railroad tracks. You've heard that a creek used to run down there, haven't you? Here's an opportunity to see the thing, and you may never get the chance again.

A lad from Louisville who's going places in radio is Frank Burger. His idea for using that portable mike and following the band at the half of Saturday's game is, according to Sulzer, the first time such a thing has ever been done anywhere. The stuff went over well and was a real success. Frank has the voice, knows how to put it over, can write his own line, and isn't afraid to try something new. You'll be hearing more from him.

The dumb letters at the Kentucky are clever. Whether or not they are authentic, there's an enjoyment to them that Laurel and Hardy comedies can't achieve, and I doubt any comedian can get as many consistent laughs as these put across. The one about the woman who swears to Western Union commending their quick service reminds me of the old rag about the person who sent a wire and then told the clerk, "Oh, let me sign it, he knows my writing."

In his unassuming way, John Lewis is one of the most colorful personalities of our faculty. A man who shoots from the hips and stands behind what he says will attract attention anywhere, but when you find that quality combined with the resourcefulness John possesses, you have a most interesting person. One thing to notice about John is the way he thinks. And you can watch him, for activity is predominant in his character. I think he is fond of candy, too.

The Stroller situation deserves a lot of consideration from its members. The show of last spring was a good one, proving in itself that students can put on a musical revue. But the deficiency in funds at the close of the show, the small audience, and the poor advertising the thing was given, are all factors that Study your books, kiddies, but at the same time study yourself. Bring your personality, everyone has one (though, sometimes referred to as "personality"). Have confidence that you can, will and do! Chatter Freshmen have often been accused of being dumb and after the story told on one Freshman, I am willing to concede the point... It seems that Professor Kelly asked one of his freshman English groups what certain books they liked for deep reading... whether to be funny or just plain dumb, one "Freshman gentleman" remarks that he reads "True Story", whereupon the said Professor naively replies that he wasn't sure about the "deep" element being in "True Story" but that sometime you had to do a lot of wading... how do you know, Professor? ? ? ? What well-known etymology professor admits that the scarcity of covering on the upper region of his cranium is due to his better half... It seems that skillets are in the habit of playing hop scotch on said portion. (This is strictly on the level, he admits it!)

SEEN FROM THE PRESS BOX

By JAY LUCIAN

Clemson provided Kentucky with its first real test of the season. Clemson's earlier games with Duke and Georgia Tech benefited her considerably in playing a more advanced game of hard football than Kentucky. It is doubtful if a closer game of football will be played on Still Field this season and those fans who turned out certainly got their money's worth. Clemson had a fine team which really did not deserve to lose.

Kentucky's line was unusually conspicuous by its poor blocking and by the lack of protection it gave the backs. The touchdown was scored by the indomitable spirit of the backfield who took things into their own hands and won the game almost unassisted by the linemen. Some of the ineffectuality of the line can be explained by the fact that this was its first experience in line in playing against a seven-man line, all its previous games having been played against a six-man forward wall. "All well that ends well," and Kentucky's insight as to what a fast charging line can do will more than prepare them for what they can expect from their future increasingly formidable opponents.

Abie Ayers showed again the superlative qualities of a kick. The ability to follow and gain the utmost ground behind interference is a fine art which Abie has claimed in their repertoire, and Abie is one of these backs. Abie's ability to pass is a story in itself!

He came to Kentucky with the reputation of being an expert blocker, place-kicker, punter, mauler, ball carrier, and especially a smart quarterback. Passing was not his strongest point. Abie knew the importance that passing was attaining in football and set about teaching himself to pass. Every day before practice Abie would be on the field catching punts and returning them to the kickers in long, studied passes. When a practice game came Abie continued to practice passing with the other backs who panned about or punted. With the close of spring practice most of the other backs turned in, but not Abie. He stayed out there till school was out and every afternoon found him passing to whoever happened to be there during his hours at Corbin. Abie continued to handle the oblate spheroid. Now, after all that work, Abie has come into his own and is cashing in on his foresight. Abie's good points extend beyond his football playing. He gets no help in his school work and stands in the upper end of his classes. And for training, Abie is beyond reproach.

A suggestion was offered after the game regarding the seating of the band. The band is required to use their student books for admission and they are entitled to view the game from a better angle than where they are. A place in the center of the Kentucky stands would serve many good purposes. Seated there in the center of the student body, their music could be better heard, they could present a better spectacle, they would serve more usefully in leading the cheers and their closer proximity would give a better moxie to the boys on the field, the bench and the student body in the stands.

the country coped with similar problems and to pick up valuable points in this manner.

The delegates were guests of Armour & Company at a dinner Thursday evening at the Palmer House. Philip L. Reed, first vice-president of the company, was toast master and Harvey Ellerd, personnel director, was the principal speaker. Mr. Ellerd stated that his organization recognized generally the superiority of college trained men over those who had not been so trained. Another speaker was Dr. M. J. O'Connell, vice-president of DePaul, who stated quite emphatically that extra-curricular activities were 50 percent of a college education.

At 10:45 Friday, Eugene T. Dupont, sales consultant expert of The Chicago Daily News, spoke on "How to Sell Your College Paper to the Local and National Advertisers." Following this, The Daily News was most at a luncheon on the 24th floor of its $10,000,000 structure. After this luncheon, at which the Managing Editor of The News, the principal speaker, the delegates were conducted on a tour of the plant, which is one of the largest in the world.

Friday evening we were guests of the National Advertising Service at a dinner at the St. Clair hotel. Following this we attended the football game between DePaul and Dayton University at the Loyola stadium.

Prof. Harry F. Harrington, Dean of Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern University, spoke to the group at 10 a. m. Saturday on "The Newspaper of the Future," and his address was carried by the National Broadcasting Company. At noon we were guests of Marshall Field and Company at a luncheon in their Wedgewood Room. The principal speaker was Mr. Ross Bartley, director of publicity for the Century of Progress Exposition. We then adjourned to the Fair grounds where we were received by Col. Rufus C. Daves, president of the Exposition. Our final meeting was at 6 p. m. for a dinner given by DePaul at Thompson's on the Fair grounds.

Wildcats Eke Out Victory Over Tigers

They innovated lateral passes. A few minutes before the end of the first half, a lateral, Johnson to Pritchard, netted an 85-yard gain for the Cats. Johnson started through left tackle with the ball and behind the line of scrimmage, who scooted around the left end.

The Clemson Tigers had the best line that the Kentucky Wildcats have faced this year, and their years for a tough team were well rounded. The two ends, Potters and Kissam, were fast and sure tacklers, and there were very few times that the Kentucky safety man was able to take a step before he was downed. Randy Hinson, quarterback, played the entire game, standing game for the Clemson team. His nose was broken in the Duke game, but he wore a mask against Kentucky and was a double-threat man in his passing and running. When he threw a pass he did not bring his arm all the way back, like most passers do, but cocked it behind his ear and made a snap throw as a baseball catcher does.

At the start of the game it looked as though it was going to be a repetition of the Washington and Lee game, inasmuch as there was a lot of kicking in the first quarter. Clemson lost quite a bit of yardage because of their slowness in calling signals, and in taking too many time-outs. With the exception of this, the game was fairly even during the first 56 minutes of play, and then the Wildcats started their rampage.

Stephens, Tiger half back, was outstanding in his kicking. He averaged 38 yards on his kicks, and on one occasion booted the ball fifty yards in the air before it went out of bounds. Yastrow, Kentucky 31-yard marker. The box score follows:

expressions. Mr. VanArsdale plays with an economy of inflection and energy.

In the role of Agatha, Marjorie Powell, always a popular player at the Guignol, brings new laurels to her career as a versatile actress. In "The Watched Pot" she interprets a very charming but rapid young lady who confuses love with vegetation. Her delightfully insipid manner adds greatly to the "boiling."

Howard Bruce Shepherd, whose stage experience to date is that of a pirate in "Peter Pan" of last season, adequately enacts the role of Trevor Bavel, around whom the action of the play centers.

One of the most carefully worked out bits of acting is done by Marlan Galloway, a veteran, in the role of Hortensia. Mrs. Galloway's every movement and inflection has been studiously developed.

As Ludovic Bavel, Mr. R. D. McIntyre gives one his usual weighty performances. Mr. McIntyre can be depended upon to carry the most difficult roles and his interpretation of Ludovic is no exception to his already well-established reputation.

Among the roles of the four eligible aspirants to the hand of Trevor, the heir to Briony, are seen Jeanette Lampert Brown, who returns to Lexington's little theatre after an absence of six years and demonstrates her histrionic ability, her charm, finesse, and physical grace.

Christine Johnson McBrayer and Katherine Davis, actresses of acknowledged ability and beauty, in the roles of Clare and Sybil, exercise their respective charms on the tolerant Trevor.

Milton Rosenbloom and Sarah Slack, freshmen of the University, make their initial bows as the butler and maid at Briony. Paul Mansfield, who has previously appeared on the Guignol boards in one small part, makes much of the gruff last time he was removed he was put in one of the boxes which mark the yard lines. At this point one of the cheer leaders decided that he could lend assistance to the cause. Up he stepped with the monomouth megaphone and placed same over the box, which contained our dashing young hero. Mr. Pooch then decided that he has too many working against him and so he relaxed and decided to take things easy. If persistence has anything to do with making All-Americans, here goes this vote to Mr. Pooch for the All-American dog.
