Finals: No fun for students

By Mat Herron
Features Editor

The only blue grass UK students will see this May is on their way from dorm room to library, or from dorm room to computer lab.

Or from dorm room to hospital, depending on the amount of sleep deprivation incurred from cramming for final exams.

For some students, finals week seems less intense and draining than the two weeks before it, when professors inundate students with assignments that redefine the phrase "going away present."

Nonetheless one word leads to an altogether pleasant finals week, — preparation.

Lesser humans would buckle under the rigorous studying regimen adhered to by Melanie Cruz, Student Government Association president.

"From past experience, I don't sleep for five days, cramming and non-stop consumption of caffeine," said Cruz, who during finals last semester went from Saturday until her last exam on Thursday without snoozing.

Masochistic?
"Absolutely," she said. "I work better in conditions like that ... just because I have a short attention span."

Psychological obstacles surrounding final exams, Cruz said, namely anxiety over scoring high on exams to boost or maintain an acceptable grade point average, can hinder students' performances on tests.

"There's no way that you can actually know everything you need to know," Cruz said.

Postponing study time for tests until the weekend — and even day — before the exam strikes many students, including sophomore Diana Ramsey.

A former mechanical engineering major who switched to electrical, Ramsey said she has practiced last-minute ritual since high school.

SURVIVAL BY CAFFEINE Mountain Dew and books, the magical formula for finals week.

"I came out OK," she said.
"Test time comes around and I'm pretty much screwed."

Ramsey, the tutoring coordinator for SGA, said determining what they need to know and reviewing now wards off the unnecessary finals crunch later.

To avoid the munchies, Domino's Pizza plans to offer a $7.99 Mega Deal on "any size, any topping," said Judson Ridgway, owner of the store's Euclid Avenue location.

This discount adds to the 30 percent students already receive throughout the school year.

Finals week, Ridgway said the orders pile quickly and tax the employees.

"We're totally staffed out," he said. "We usually have to hire three to four extra people."

No Vivarin or espresso for Monica McQueary — the social work junior sits pretty with only two exams, both on the same day, both non-cumulative.

"I can't wait until finals week," McQueary said. "All you do is sit around and study for exams. I don't think it's as hard as people make it out to be."

She said she'll start preparing for the tests the Wednesday before and knock off after about 12 hours.

Getting through the month of April poses a big challenge.

Teachers enjoy break too

Professors spend summer working

By Brian Dunn
Staff Writer

Department Chair for Communication James Applegate plans to spend his 20th summer break at UK the same way he has in the past.

He will be teaching the usual eight-week intersession class, researching the usual annual project and spending the usual one-week vacation with his family in Hilton Head, S.C.

But he enjoys it.

"I like being around the University over summer," he said.

Most professors don't get the break that most students do. Summer, to them, is a time to catch up on some research, teach an additional class and get ready for the fall semester.

For example, Dave Wagner, a forestry associate professor, plans to spend much of his summer time in field research. Being a university professor is a year-round job, he said.

Summer offers him fewer obligations to class and more time to research, especially research that takes him to places such as the Yukon and British Columbia. Wagner, who has been teaching at UK for 11 years, said he'll still spend about 30 hours a week in research. For a couple of weeks, he'll spend 10-15 hours a day in field and lab research.

But summer is a time for not only professors and associate professors to work. Teaching assistants also hang around and try to enhance their careers by doing similar work.

Valerie Johnson, an English teaching assistant, said summer gives her the time to read for dissertation research and to revise papers for publication. Also, she will be taking classes during the summer.

"I'm sure professors work harder," she said. "They publish books where I'll get essays."

Still, Johnson, a third-year teaching assistant, will teach a class in addition to her researching, editing and taking a class of her own.

But Johnson, Applegate and Wagner all said summer is also a time to look forward to, because the break isn't nearly as stressful as the fall and spring semesters.

"From spring break on out," Johnson said, "I look forward to the summer. Comparatively speaking, the summer is more relaxed."

Also, teachers have a week or two, maybe more, to take a vacation and to spend time with their families.

Johnson plans to spend some time visiting college friends in Chicago and Pennsylvania.

Wagner plans a two-week vacation with his wife and two kids in Florida. And Applegate and his family will return to Hilton Head for a week of "totally relaxing on the beach."

"I don't plan to think much," he said. "I'm not even taking a laptop or anything."

Applegate looks at summer break as a "little bit of a slow-down."

"I always plan twice as much in the summer as I actually get done," he said. "It's a nice atmosphere in which to teach."

Professors recall exams; give advice to students

By Amity Wahl
Contributing Writer

The semester is nearing an end, but the stress is getting worse.

This must mean only one thing: Finals week is here.

The last few weeks of every semester can seem incredibly hectic for most people. With one paper due today and two papers plus a presentation due tomorrow, students may start projecting their frustrations onto their professors. Yet this may not be fair, because the professors were once students, too and they can have some good advice to ease the finals woes.

Karla Robinson, a professor in the School of Journalism and Telecommunications, completed her undergraduate work at Ohio State and earned her master's and doctorate at Northwestern University, near Chicago.

Robinson remembers what it was like to have the pressure of final, but she said she tried to use that stress positively.

"Feeling that kind of pressure helped to keep pushing me. The challenge," she said, "is keeping a mind-set. Take a break if you have to — turn on the TV, take a walk or do aerobics to help clear your head."

Jim Stoker, a monetary economics professor at the Gatton College of Business and Economics, can also empathize with finals stress. His advice to students in studying for their finals is to start early.

"When professors would bog me down at the end of the semester, of course I would panic first. Then the best thing to do is to judge where you stand in each class. Figure out your weak spots to see how each hour of studying can best benefit you," Stoker said.

Both professors agreed that starting early was the best way to ensure a top-notch performance during finals week, but that is not always a realistic option for students. Pulling an all-nighter to cram for an exam the next morning is a common way to study for finals. However, the professors do not recommend that method.

"I've pulled all-nighters before and all they do is cause problems, unless it's your last final. It throws your body clock off to the point where your performance on the rest of your exams will suffer," Robinson said.

Jamie Duncan, a psychology sophomore, shares the professors' viewpoint — she never pulls all-nighters.

"All-nighters are ineffective.

You get tired of studying the subject and because you want to sleep, the words are read but not absorbed," Duncan said.

To avoid having to pull an all-nighter, plan ahead. Find a good place to study. Robinson and Stoker both relied on the library to study for their finals. Robinson said having students all around her doing the same thing kept her focused on her own need to study.

However, if you don't like the hustle and bustle of Margaret I. King Library, Duncan suggests the library in the Chemistry and Physics Building as an alternative.

For most, a dorm room or apartment is the worst place to get anything done because of the distractions.

Yet according to Susan Walander, an accounting senior, it can be done.

"If you want to study in your dorm room or apartment you need to discipline yourself to stay focused. Don't answer the phone, let the answering machine get it. And above all resist the urge to turn on the TV. Reward yourself by taking 10-minute breaks occasionally," Walander said.

Whether or not you take this advice to heart, finals are real and they're here.

Classes way to catch up

By Angela McGinty
Contributing Writer

The semester is almost over. All the hard work, the late-night studying and creative procrastination are nearing a close. Students are sighing a collective sigh of relief as they dream of the lazy summer days to follow.

So why would anyone want to go to summer school?

"I'd be wasting my time if I didn't," said Sarah Van Arsdale, an English and classics sophomore.

Van Arsdale is excited about attending summer school.

"I like to stay intellectually stimulated," she said.

The only drawback for Van Arsdale is that she will not be able to have a job for the whole summer since she plans on attending the eight-week session starting on June 12.

For those who are staying in the area, summer school is a great opportunity to catch up while still allowing for a full-time job.

Brian Turner, an art studio senior, is picking up hours at work and attending the four-week session.

"It's a photography class, so there will be a lot of studio time, but it shouldn't interfere too much," Turner said.

One problem students have with summer school is that they will miss out on their summer vacation, but often, the need to catch up or get ahead is more important than the three-month break.

"It's kind of ... crunch time; I'm trying to get out as soon as possible," Turner said.

Will Fite, a biosystems engineering sophomore, is also thinking ahead.

"I've got a lot of hard classes in the fall, so I'm trying to lighten my load a little," he said. "It's time to focus."

Enrollment for summer school has been at a consistent level for several years.

Marietta Messer, summer school coordinator, described UK's summer sessions as a more "relaxed atmosphere" than the regular terms.

"The classes are smaller so there's more personal attention," Messer said. She sees summer school as a good opportunity for new students to start to get acquainted with the campus and also for continuing students to catch up or get ahead.

Summer school allows students to stay in the school mode so there isn't as severe a shock upon returning in the fall. While it may rob students of their ideal summer, it may mean a more enjoyable break the following summer or even an earlier graduation.

The four-week session begins May 13 and ends June 10. The eight-week session runs from June 12 until Aug. 7.

In-state tuition and fees for the four-week session are $104 per credit hour; the eight-week is $624 for full-time (six hours).

The fees vary for the Graduate School, the College of Law, and the College of Pharmacy.

Summer: No rest for the wicked

By Tiffany Gilmartin
Editorial Editor

The culmination of finals usually has students wanting to get off campus as quickly as possible and head home for some well-deserved rest and relaxation.

After all, for those who have finished their years here at UK, summer is a time for real life to give them a swift kick in the butt.

This best describes how political science and philosophy senior Lori Wolfe is going to spend her summer. She will barely have time to get out of her cap and gown before her July wedding arrives.

Wolfe said she is hoping to secure an internship at National City Bank in her native Ohio, but if that doesn't work out she will probably stay at her current job.

"I'm hoping to save up as much money as I can this summer before I start law school," Wolfe said.

Wolfe will be attending the University of Dayton School of Law in the fall and needs to start on a nest egg before then. Most law schools prohibit first-year students from working and Dayton is no different, so she and her fiancé will be surviving on only one income for a while — furthering her need to make some good money this summer. Still, this summer has a fun trip in the works for Wolfe as she and her fiancé are planning a honeymoon trip to the Bahamas in July.

Summer for Wolfe has never been more relaxing than school, she said. Wolfe remembers the summer between her freshman and sophomore years during which she worked and attended summer school.

"It was the hardest because I had to get used to working and balancing at summertime and study time mode."

... A sentiment echoed by Amy Smith. Working for her father's company Smith Bros in Bardstown, the communications junior said she works harder in the summer since she normally doesn't have a job during the school year. But she plans on using the summer to prepare her for next year, in which she will work and go to school.

Smith is also hoping to secure an internship at her local radio station and work for her father.

"I'm going to live at home so I can work and commute to school next year," Smith said.

While working for family members can be a bit easier, it also means being at their beck and call 24-7. Smith isn't too bothered by this prospect, though; she said she is looking forward to going home for the summer.

Another student not concerned with going home for the summer is journalism junior Josh Smith. He is planning on working for his family newspaper, Three Forks, in Beattyville. Smith said he will be working about four days a week typesetting, reporting, taking pictures and working in the dark room or whatever else needs to be done at the paper.

For Smith this summer job is one that can be parlayed into a lifelong career. His parents own the paper and he knows that he will one day own it too.

"For me college is just a technicality; I know I already have a job," Smith said.

Working all summer is a rite of passage UK students have become comfortable with as they learn to balance summertime fun with work demands.

Dorms open extra day for moving out

By Chris Campbell
Assistant Editorial Editor

Despite the outcome of Gov. Paul Patton's higher education plan, Lexington Community College students will not have problems getting rooms for the fall.

More importantly now for students, both at LCC and Lexington Campus, is moving out for the rest of the year.

Changes have also been made to this year's closing of the school year. In the past, dorms closed on the night of the last final. The policy was changed this year to accommodate many. Now students have until Saturday at noon to vacate the dorms.

"We're keeping them open for an extra day for those students who have a late exam and cannot leave the dorms by that time," said Allen Riemann, director of Auxiliary Services.

Yet some students, some don't know what is going to happen.

"I haven't heard anything from my residence advisers about moving out," said

Stephanie Bell, a political science freshman. White and others agreed that if any special steps have been made, no one has been notified about them.

Students and RAs say Thursday of finals week once again sounds like the busy day for students trying to "get out" while they can for the summer. Finals week has always looked to be a time where traffic runs high and parking tickets are as distributed as oxygen.

Then again, some students are luckier than others.

"I am moving out on Friday (of last week)," Bell said. "I got lucky and have no finals so I get to leave way before anyone else."

Students have been preparing for the inevitable to occur — traffic.

"I brought my car here (from home) so that when my parents come here we'll have two cars to unload everything," Bell said.

"But as far as parking is concerned, I am freelancing it."

Finals are at the worst time of the year

After attempting to study anthropology or bacterial sciences for an hour during finals week, the absolute worst mistake anyone can make is to flip on the tube.

The reason? On TNT, the Utah Jazz and L.A. Clippers are playing game four of the NBA playoffs. On ESPN 2, the Edmonton Oilers battle Dallas in pivotal game six of the NHL playoffs. How could anyone choose studying for some lame final when it's playoff season?

That's the real problem with the educational system in Kentucky. Students don't achieve in the commonwealth because finals are at the absolute worst time of the year. How about finals in February?

Nothing happens in February. I would sure rather study during the same week of the big UK-Vanderbilt battle than during playoff season.

And professional sports don't have anything happening during February. The regular season games just wouldn't have the same effects on my studying as do playoff games.

This year UK students get a 1-2 punch. Not only are students concerned about the playoffs, but the Kentucky Derby takes place before finals. It's up to UK to accommodate the Kentucky Derby, not the other way around. Professors, with the Derby and playoffs taking place this week, don't be surprised if you see some incredibly weak grades on your finals

But here are a couple of tips for you professors to help student achievement on finals.

Instead of having an essay question on the positives and negatives of NAFTA, make the essay question about past Stanley Cup winners and their reason for success. True/false questions should revolve around jockeys at the Kentucky Derby.

The fill-in-the-blank section should cover the ingredients of a mint julep, not some chemical formula. Luckily for me, my professors realized at the beginning of the semester that finals week is at a terrible time. To professors Braden, Clay, Roeder and Ryan, I thank you greatly, and I'll enjoy the playoffs in comfort.

Book selling hassles

TODD KAISAR Kernel Contributor

'BOOK BIND' Selling back textbooks is another frustration students must face at the end of school year.

By Jessica Stevens
Contributing Writer

On average, students at UK spend $300 to $400 per semester on books, according to Dave Mulberger, University Bookstore manager.

At the end of the semester, if the book is going to be used again, the maximum amount a student can receive if he or she sells it back is half the original price. And that's the best case scenario.

"If we have not received a requisition from the professor or if a new edition comes out, the book is worth zero to 30 percent of the original price," Mulberger said.

While there is little difference in cost at the campus bookstores, stores compete for students' business.

"I go to Kennedy's because it is more efficient. The buy-back price is similar at most places. All college students get a raw deal," said a third-year graduate student at the Medical Center.

Many UK and Lexington Community

College students hate that books are expensive and little refund is given back at the semester's end.

"The first semester I came to the harsh realization that bookstores do not give back enough money on textbooks to make the return worth my time and effort," said Joseph Stewart, a business management freshman.

"As much as we pay for tuition and books we should get more money back. We have no use for the books after the semester is over," LCC freshman Sharon Hester said.

Others believe there is no need to pay such extreme amounts of money for books hardly used.

"We don't even use them that much," mechanical engineering sophomore Brian Berry said.

"The book stores should either lower the prices or increase the buy-back prices."

The University Bookstore will have representatives at the Kirwan-Blanding Complex today through Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. to buy back textbooks.

Seniors reflect as final day nears

By Caryn McMillen
Contributing Writer

Birds are chirping. Flowers are blooming. The weather is getting warmer. What do these signs mean for some UK students? Graduation is approaching.

Students come to UK from all over the state, the country and the world. They come for different reasons, and they come with different expectations. Despite these contrasts, all students share one common goal: graduation.

Carisa Frasure, a family studies senior, will graduate in May. Frasure said she was a bit scared coming to Lexington to attend UK from a small town in Indiana.

"I was naive of the big city and college life, but I've grown to love it. In fact, I hope to stay in Kentucky after graduation," Frasure said.

Frasure also said that her two best years at UK were spent being a resident adviser in Blanding II. She said being an RA was a good experience because she was able to meet so many new people.

Many students come to the UK without knowing what they want to do with their lives. Chad Willett, a senior from Ohio, is one example.

Willett came to UK undecided, so he took a variety of classes to try to find his interests and strengths.

During his sophomore year, Willett found his calling in life. "I took an acting ensemble class taught by Marlon Bailey my sophomore year. He totally inspired me. As a matter of fact, he alone was the reason I became a theater major," Willett said.

Willett has been in five studio and two mainstage productions at UK. He has not limited his success to UK. Willett received a grant and used it to direct Robert the Bird at the high school he graduated from.

Seniors have completed projects, crammed for exams and pulled all nighters during their years at UK. However, many students agree that college is not just about receiving an education.

Keith Wardrip, a geography senior, said that making friends and gaining life experience is also important for college students. Some of his most memorable times at UK were spent with his fraternity.

"One of the best times I had here was sliding naked in the mud at 2 a.m. the night before a party," Wardrip said. "It was so much fun, my fraternity made it a tradition."

Wardrip, a Louisville native, said he is glad he was able to get involved at UK.

The seniors came to UK from different places and took different paths once they got here, now they will embark on their individual journeys after graduation.

Freshman look to the years ahead

By Thayne Schickel
Contributing Writer

Fraternity parties, all nighters, roommates, campus food, hard classes, tiny dorm rooms — the class of 2000 came to UK last August with many expectations. But as their first year here at UK draws to a close, the question now is whether those expectations were met.

Freshman Jennifer Kremer sums up the feelings of her class by saying "Yes and no."

"I knew there was going to be a lot more work required," Kremer said, "but I wasn't prepared to have to teach myself a lot of the material."

Sarah Miller, an integrated strategic communication freshman, said she also expected a lot of work, and she thought college would be harder.

"I expected it to be difficult, but classes in high school really prepared me for college," Miller said.

Freshman all seem to agree on what they liked most about college so far. Freedom ranks first on everyone's list.

"My biggest dislike is that tests are worth such a large percent of your grade. One can ruin your whole grade for the class," Miller said.

Many students said they found difficulty adjusting from high school.

Francine freshman Judy Dawson said "all of your school work is up to you. There's a lot more responsibility."

"I miss knowing everybody in all of my classes," Miller said. Dawson said he missed the friends who went to other schools. Kremer said she missed "having teachers that know you and can work with you more personally."

In making these adjustments, most freshmen remember when they realized they were, as Dorothy would say, "not in Kansas anymore."

How other people see us

By Haili Wu

They came, they saw and they adjusted.

For some, there may be a language problem to deal with first. For others, the cultural difference is the bigger shock.

Overall, foreign students at UK do profess a liking to the school and community.

UK and Lexington, on the other hand, also provide some interesting phenomena these students have never seen before.

"I have never seen anything like it," said Andrea Wharrier, referring, of course, to UK basketball mania. "England is more reserved ... and there is less community spirit."

Wharrier came to UK in January from Newcastle, England, marking her first trip to the United States.

She finds America to be different than what she gathered from films.

The nightclubs in town surprised Wharrier.

"I never experienced anything like it — the dancing, the dress," she said. "The music was different. There is a lot more heavy rock here."

Not only does Lexington have much more entertainment, it also offers more restaurants.

"There are very few places to eat in Newcastle," Wharrier said.

"Here everywhere you turn you can find a restaurant."

As for the school, Wharrier finds American classrooms have a strange tradition.

"The teachers actually tell you what's on the test," she said with awe.

Wharrier said she really likes the fact that American classrooms encourage participation and that the students are equally eager to express their opinions. This is quite different from English classrooms, she said.

The classes at UK also attracted French civil engineering senior Christian Caffarel.

"The classes are small," he said. "It's my first real insight of American way of work, American professional life."

Tzer Nan Tan, a third-year

civil engineering student from Malaysia, said, "UK is larger, you meet more people. (There are) more activities for students. (And) the professors are better."

Coming from a big city like Paris, Caffarel likes the amount of space he has seen around Lexington.

So, which city would he prefer to live in?

"I'd rather take Lexington and bring it back to France," he said.

The best of two worlds.

Caffarel, Tan and Wharrier all like Lexington, but that doesn't mean every foreign student likes Lexington better than his or her native city.

"Of course, I should prefer home," said Anya Karabanova, a foreign language and international economics sophomore from Russia.

"I think St. Petersburg is better."

Having been here for two years, Karabanova said the most memorable events from this school year are the trips she took to California, Florida and Mexico.

Overall, Karabanova likes this year better than her freshman year.

"This year is better than the first," she said. "(This) second year is more comfortable ..."

Bright future for UK Volleyball

By Jay G. Tate
 Weekend Sports Editor

With the NCAA basketball tournament having already made its March tour de force, sports talk in the Bluegrass has turned to the state's unofficial sport of spring — recruiting.

But not all of it centers on who will be playing in Rupp Arena next season.

Instead, the question is who will be playing in Memorial Coliseum.

The UK volleyball team has signed three recruits to help the team improve on its 12-20 record for the 1996 season.

At the front of the Cats' recruiting class is outside hitter Stephanie Taylor of Bedford Heights, Ohio.

UK is now looking for some dominant front-line play. With Taylor, the Cats may have found a pot o' gold.

And it's not just the Cats who are singing her praises. Taylor was named to Volleyball Monthly's "Fab 50" list of the nation's top prep talent.

"Stephanie is one of the most heralded players we've had in a long time," Ralston-Flory said. "She is a very dynamic player who can do a lot of things for us," said Fran Ralston-Flory, UK head coach.

And if the past is prologue, Ralston-Flory has a lot to look forward to.

Taylor was a four-year letterman in high school and was named to the all-state team her senior year.

It was on the strength of that final year which earned her the national attention that she was propelled into the minds of many Division I coaches.

"Before this year, she wasn't very well known outside of Ohio," Feldman said. "By the time other schools found out about her, UK had already made her feel pretty comfortable and that's where she went," said Bill Feldman, a talent scout who publishes the Midwest Volleyball Scouting Report.

Despite an intriguing blend of size and power, the knock on Taylor is that her skills are somewhat unrefined.

Her club teams played against only satisfactory talent and some said the competition may not have prepared her sufficiently for Southeastern Conference play.

"Stephanie has a lot to learn, but she's got extraordinary athletic talent," Feldman said. "Offense is about seeing things — she sees the game very well for someone who doesn't have elite training."

Though Taylor's presence could help the Cats, UK assistant coach Tonya Johnson remains cautious in her expectations for the newest member of her spiking corps.

Besides Taylor, the Cats also pulled in Megan Weiskircher from one of the hotbeds of prep volleyball.

The middle blocker from Houston, Texas, will add more depth to a team laden with bodies in the middle.

Last season, Jenny Muzzey and Tracy Thompson played a major role in UK's top 20 NCAA ranking in team blocking.

"With four middle blockers, I think we'll be ready to play the kind of game we want," Ralston-Flory said.

"We'll be able to play fast and the middles won't be dead at the end of the season."

Also coming in to help UK play a faster offense is 5-foot-8 setter Kristy Burns.

The Martinsville, Ind., native could prove to be a valuable asset for the Cats.

"(Burns) is setting the kind of offense we want to run right now on her high school team," Ralston-Flory said. "So she will have as much experience as (sophomore setter) Terry (Crabb) has right now with a fast offense."

WHAT'S your sign?

By Suzanne Raffeld

Aries (March 21-April 19): While trying to cram every last morsel of knowledge into your brain, you go into shut-down mode. While not prepared to take the exams in half your classes, you know the story lines from every major soap opera, and use that to your advantage.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Do not study. Instead, let the knowledge seep in through osmosis and see what happens. Try propositioning your instructor in order to better your grade. If that doesn't work, weep pitifully and make up some story which includes both your mother and your beloved pet dying. Deception is on your side this week, so use it your advantage.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): It's your week to manipulate others. First, tell your best friend that you guys will no longer be friends if your he/she doesn't take your calc/English/biology final for you. This will work out nicely. Then, go to your parents, and rant and rave that you will drop out of school to continue Marshall Applewhite's legacy unless they send you to Cancun. This will also work out nicely.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): I see small plagues and locusts inhabiting your inner sanctum, which will interfere with your study time. Then you try some crafty ploy to get out of a final, and the professor whacks you upside the head for your inability to lie well. But you manage to pass the majority of your finals. At home, you will work at your crappy job with your lame high school friends. But you do manage to have fun.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): Due to a saline solution mishap, you are unable to complete your last final. This inspires you to take up the cause of the visionally challenged, crusading for the virtually blind on college campuses everywhere.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A large man in a dark suit will approach you on Thursday. Ignore anything he says to you, unless you want to join his weight loss cult. Stay away from morbidly obese people all week. They will be cranky and violent. Take your last exam quietly. If you are too loud, another student will hit you very hard on your head, causing your knowledge to be erased.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Bring a piece of fruit to every exam. Preferably an apple. At the end of the exam, chuck the apple at your professor's head. On Thursday, drive around New Circle Road twice and stop at a fast food restaurant. Try to engage in conversation with the cashier. It will be good for your soul.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not study in a group. Your classmates will expect you to do all the work, and be snide to boot. Study by yourself, in a room in an empty building to ensure protection of your intellectual property.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Glare a lot. Make the competition think you're not only an intellectual, but you're hostile, too. Barring your teeth also creates an interesting impression. Dress in black, keep your head down, and carry some philosophy book around with you at all times. Then, start singing show tunes at the top of your lungs. It's your week to be original.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): At the end of your last final, kiss the person next to you. You need to make some new friends. Try to convince this person to come home with you. If you fail, pick up some live poultry to bring home to mom and dad instead.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Control your eating this week. You study best when your blood sugar is low. When you do eat, make sure it is some kind of gummy, sugary concoction that makes you nauseous. Your study conditions are at its prime when you're sick to your stomach. So combined with the low blood sugar and upset stomach, you'll be doing smashingly well at all your exams.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): Like a fish, your slippery morality can get you in and out of trouble. But next week will not be so good. Your karma sends you into a state of insanity, which, needless to say, interferes with your test taking. But you maniacal rants about the CIA lifting thoughts out of your head seems to amuse the people around you.

Tips for finals week

Excitement is in the air. The birds are chirping, the flowers are in bloom and there is a dark cloud hovering over UK.

This week is finals week.

For those of you who tire of crossword puzzles and gallons of coffee, this column is dedicated to you. In the words of the Gimp in Chief, "I feel your pain." I share in the horror of taking lengthy, difficult exams that will have an overwhelming effect on my grades.

What does one really learn during finals week? Well, if you aren't already skilled at cramming — you will be. Study what you need to know and no more.

Memorize, mesmerize and remember to forget everything you studied before you hit the door to leave. Your life will not end if you screw up during finals week, so while you're studying, remember to have fun.

Here are a few suggestions on how to handle finals:

First, if you already know you are going to fail a class no matter what you get on the final, prepare yourself to put on one helluva a show.

Surf the Internet and search for one of those "Finals Lists" that suggest countless pranks, gags and dramatic roles to play out while taking the exam. Be wild and crazy, act out fantasies, hum the "Death March." Be as rude and as evil as you want, it doesn't matter, you've already failed. And by doing so, you can destroy the concentration of the suckers who actually care.

Secondly, make sure to shower and groom yourself. During finals week, you would think it was Halloween with the number of homeless look-a-likes running around campus. Take showers and change clothes daily.

There is nothing so sad as the sight of hundreds of usually beautiful women running around campus looking like extras in "Deliverance."

Next up, everyone needs to pick a night, or a period of excess free time and cut loose. Go and get drunk, break stuff that doesn't belong to you, pick a fight with someone you don't even know.

Everyone needs to get rowdy every once and a while, but finals is a time when rowdiness is next to Godliness. Finally, after it is all over with, get together with all of your friends for one last time.

Reminiscence over the last 9 months and keep the good times in mind. After that, plan to make the next 9 months even better.

Remember that finals are important, but if you screw up, you always have next semester and the many to follow. Do well on your exams, but have fun and stay clean. It's hard to do calculus when the room reeks of Colt-45 and AquaNet.

THE BACKSLIDERS

By O. Jason Stapleton
Assistant Sports Editor

At first glance, The Backsliders might not seem like the prototypical country band.

That's because they're not. The Backsliders are one of the few new country bands that has not forgotten country music's genesis. They play a style of country music that is so deeply entrenched in the strong roots of country music that the sound is unmistakable.

The band hails from Raleigh, N.C., and has been playing together for about six years.

"Chip (Robinson) and myself have been playing together since 1991," guitarist Steve Howell said. "We started off as an acoustic thing, with a mandolin guitar."

While the two fledgling musicians were on their own they were playing in small bars and even coffee houses — pretty much anywhere there would be people to listen to their music.

Robinson and Howell played as an acoustic duo for a while, then they decided it was time for the band to go electric.

Eventually the band evolved into the beast it is now, with Howell handling the electric guitar and lead vocals, Robinson on the acoustic guitar, Danny Kurtz playing the electric bass, Brad Rice also playing the electric guitar, and Jeff Dennis as the drummer.

"This lineup's been together as a band for a little over two years now," Howell said. "Danny has been with us for actually about four years now."

Even after they had gotten their full band together, though, it was still hard for The Backsliders to get a good gig.

They played in a few bars in the Raleigh area, but they found it difficult to progress in the early stages of the electric band.

"It was hard for us to get some bookings because we'd go up and tell people, 'We're playing country music,'" Howell said. "They just weren't used to people playing original country music."

With the rise of bands like Jason and the Scorchers, Wilco and Son Volt, The Backsliders were finally able to get off the ground and get plenty of bookings.

The band immediately took to life on the road. "It's a bummer if you drive for a long way to only play for five people, but you have got to take the good with the bad."

Despite the occasional bad experience, the band really enjoys life on the road.

"There's not much more you can ask for than to drive around playing songs that you believe in and connecting with people," Howell said.

Don't get The Backsliders confused with the typical "alternative country" bands, though.

The band is influenced by all different types of music — everything from Merle Haggard to Bill Monroe to the Beatles to Elvis Costello and even Tom Petty. The band has just released its first full-length CD, Throwin' Rocks at the Moon, and they couldn't be happier.

"It feels pretty good, but it's been recorded for a year now, so it feels almost anti-climactic," Howell said. "It's great to be able to go somewhere you've never been before and there's people out there who actually know who the band is."

Keeping the name of their band in mind, however, they are not letting their recent success go to their heads.

"I've heard the term Backslider applied to church members who have stopped going to church, or slipping out at night on the side," Howell said.

"Everybody's a backslider because everybody tries hard, but nobody quite gets there."

Exams should be taken in Hollywood

Here we go again. Break out the coffee and cigarettes. Clear a space off on the desk that hasn't been sat at all year long. Stock up on microwaveable pizzas and Snapple, because you won't have time to get anything to eat. Come to think of it, put aerosol deodorant on your shopping list too, because you won't have any time to shower. Stock up on the all important blue books, since regular paper just won't cut it.

It's finals week. Can you feel the excitement? You can't?

OF COURSE YOU CAN'T!

You can't feel anything because you haven't slept for two weeks and you have so much caffeine in your system you're starting to look like Kramer. The end of school year isn't stimulating your brain because you're too worried about whether you will score high enough on the test to be allowed to return next year.

And just ask the teachers, they love sitting in their offices grading 300 of the exact same test when they could be out playing golf or collecting snails, or whatever the heck teachers do when they aren't grading tests.

So the students aren't happy about finals week. The teachers aren't happy about finals week. If both parties don't like the system, then, you guessed it, the system needs to be changed!

In fact, there are a lot of creative ways to test one's knowledge of a certain subject. For example, an economics final would be a group field trip to "The Price is Right," and anyone who won their way on stage automatically received an A for the course. A speech therapy final would take the students to New York City, and anyone who had a meaningful conversation with a New York City cab driver would receive the almighty A in the course. A chemistry final would show specific episodes of "MacGyver" in which he blew something up using bleach, Diet Coke and tin foil, and the students would be required to describe the chemical reactions that took place. Or maybe there is no way to eliminate the basic necessity of a final exam. But certainly steps could be taken to relieve the tension among students. Those die-hard basketball fans would receive a free swing at a tied-up Christian Laettner.

Architecture majors would get one day to design an office building on campus that does not create 234 mph wind gusts. And for this year only, all students who could successfully locate a randomly chosen book in the Margaret I. King Library would get a $500 bonus on their Plus Account.

You may not think this is very funny right now. If so, then you haven't gotten sufficiently stressed about finals yet. Please call me if this is the case, and I will be more than happy to make sure you suffer like me. My wonderful finals schedule gives everything from an 8 a.m. final on Monday to the last final of the day on Friday. So I have lots of spare time to donate some of my stress to those in need.

I'll be seeing you soon...
