What in the heck do they need that for?

Is seldom use web pages in LOC lately, but maybe I should do it more. It seems as if I scooped Time magazine with my information about amihotornot.com and its hours of mindless entertainment. Time magazine recently entertainment. Time magazine recently had an article about this web page, which was in the Kernel a long time ago. So an effort to get the scoop again, here is another web page masterpiece.

STUDENT ACTIVITY

Students contributed to search

Speaking for students: Two students worked around classes, travel and work to help pick the new UK president

Try juggling the normal, everyday school routine while driving across Kentucky, studying abroad and all the while, helping to choose your university's next president.

Kevin Kidd and Jay Varellas had to do just that as UK student representatives on the UK Presidential Search Committee. Kidd, a second-year law student, said that the most demanding part of the search was getting input from people around the state. "The driving was time consuming and physically taxing," he said.

The amount of involvement also cut into studying time, Kidd said. While active on this committee, Kidd was also traveling to job interviews across the country and doing additional research on candidates Geoffroy and Whitmore.

Jay Varellas, a history senior and a Gaines Fellow, juggled trips to China and Japan while maintaining his duties to the search committee. Varellas went to China with the Gaines Center for the Humanities during the summer of 2000.

Varellas also visited Japan over Christmas break, which prevented him from attending the meeting where the final candidates were chosen. Despite notifying the committee three months in advance. Varellas was unable to avoid missing the meeting and could not exchange his ticket for an earlier return because of the high cost of airfare. However, he left his preferences for candidates with the committee chair to ensure his choices were considered at the meeting.

chair to ensure mis should be rered at the meeting.
Kidd said he wanted to be involved with the committee to help with student involvement in University decisions because he was here as an undergraduate and graduate student.

Varellas said that he was interested in being on the search committee because of his past involvement with the Futures Committee, which had come up with a profile of their own for the next president.

Although Geoffroy and Whitmore ended up withdrawing from the race (leaving Lexington entrepreneur Lee Todd holding UK's reins). Kidd and Varellas did not think their work was in vain.

By working on the committee, responsibility rested heavily on the shoulders of these two students.

sibility rested heavily on the shoulders of these two students.

"We all took it very seriously," Kidd said. "The impact of the president we will feel as a state for decades to come. I think the ramifications will be positive from the student viewpoint."

Internships help students choose career

Internships might be a ticket to a better major, job

By Jamie Legg

Many students may think they have decided on which career is right for them, while others might not have any idea what they want to do with their lives.

In either situation, an internship or shadowing session could help clarify the path to follow by offering insight and handson experience.

She said that experience affirmed that she was on the right track with her major and career choice.

Just as Brumfield realized she was on the right track, these real-life experiences could cause a student to realize a particular field was not for them. The good news he or she could change the major before it's too late.

Rescue workers refuse to abandon hope

A nation grieves its dead: Indian officials continue work as damage estimates near the $6 billion mark.

BHUJ, India — The discovery of a living 8-month-old baby — covered in his dead mother's blood but cradled in her lap — on Monday captured the heartbreak and the miracles of India's killer earthquake.

The rescue was rare cause for hope following the earthquake, which killed at least 6, 200 m. of the carthquake, which killed at least 6, 200 m. of the late of the carthquake, which killed at least 6, 200 m. of the late of the

"We saw the baby in the mother's lap, we saw some movement from the baby," said R.K. Thakur, a Border Security Forces assistant commandant. "It ook the baby in my hand and I found it was alive."

The boy was rushed to a medical center, surviving relatives were found, and the child was conscious and smiling, Thakur said, adding: "It was miraculous."

There are few even partly happy endings in western India these days.

Survivors complained Monday that confusion and a lack of equipment was hampering resoue efforts. Rescuers lacked cranes and buildozers, and many units did not even have generators, making night work impossible without lights. Soldiers hunting for survivors began work at first light and stopped when the sun went down.

light and stopped when the sun went down.

The hope of finding many more survivors "is dwindling hour by hour, but as long as there is hope, we won't give up," said Joachim Ahrens, who represents a Swiss rescue team in Bhu.

In the first estimate of damage, the Federation of Indian Chamber of Commerce and Industry Secretary General Amit Mitra said quake losses may be as high as 85.5 billion besides a daily production loss of $111 million. However, officials in Gujarat state, epicenter of Friday's magnitude 7.9 A grim-faced Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee, who toured Gujarat on Monday, said he was forming a national disaster agency to ensure immediate response to emergencies.

Tension still high in Middle East JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Ehud Barak will not meet Yasser Arrafat before Israeli elections to protest the Palestinian leader's attack on Israel in a speech, an Israeli official said Monday.
Only hours after a virulent speech against Israel at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland, Arafat said he still favored the peace process and wanted to meet Barak this week.
Arafat accused Israel of waging a "barbaric war"
and using depleted uranium against Palestinians in four months of clashes. In a statement Monday, Israel's army emphatically denied using depleted uranium. A total of 375 people have been killed, including more than 330 Arabs and more than 40 Israeli Jews since the fighting began in September.

Bush wants money for religious groups

WASHINGTON — President Bush is moving to tap religious institutions for more charitable work, confronting critics who say using public money for such programs could violate the wall between church and state. Bush was establishing a White House office Monday that would distribute billions of dollars to religious groups and charities over the next 10 years. The president wants to let such groups compete for taxpaver money to provide after-school programs, prison ministries and drug treatment, among other things. To build support. Bush will meet throughout the week with leaders of spiritual and charitable groups.

Quakes continue in India

BHUJ. India — Tremors lasting up to 30 seconds Monday continued to shake India, but no new damage was reported. A magnitude 4.3 quake was centered 21 miles from Bangalore, a city 850 miles southeast of the epicenter of Friday's quake near Bhuj. By official count, the 7.9 magnitude quake had killed 6,181 people in the industrial state of Gujarat, and the state's chief minister, Keshubhai Patel, said the toll could go as high as 20,000. Clearly overwhelmed by the disaster, the government said Sunday it would ask for a 81.5 billion loan from the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank for reconstruction. The United States on Sunday announced it would donate $5 million to the rescue efforts.

Al Green bares soul in new book

Amazing grace: Singer's autobiography an inspirational and informative read

By Tim Staley

Al Green with David Seay "Take Me to the River" Harper

In the age of VH-1's "Behind the Music," we have grown accustomed to the plight of famous musicians. It usually goes something like this: Poor kid overcomes adversity to become platinum-selling rock star, falls from grace because of drug and sex addiction, gets clean, makes comeback album, gets own "Behind the Music" episode.

The story of Al Green is a little different, though. His new autobiography "Take Me to the River," co-written by David Seay, recounts the events that led him to stardom and beyond.

and beyond.

The primary difference between plook and most autotions public of musicians lies not only in its style. But its substance as well. Instead of dishing out all the dirt on all of his friends and enemies throughout the years, delving into the gritty details of the bad times and basking in the glory of his fame, Green reveals his innermost thoughts and emotions on his wild ride, a journey different from most.

Yes, young Al Greene (he wouldn't drop the extra 'e' until in his 20s) was born to a poor but hard-working family in the rural South. Yes, he did did see the grittler side of life, the life of pimps, hookers and addicts. Yes, he became a platinum-selling soul legend.

Al Green, though, took a different route. At the height of his success, Al Green decided that things needed to change. It wasn't a drug habit he was kicking — he was turning his life over to God. Al Green, soul singer, would go on to become the Rev. Al

'Wedding Planner' follows formula for mediocrity

Love don't cost a thing: New film fails in spite of actors' chemistry and charm refreshing twists is not seen as a shrill bitch). A disastrous subplot follows with Lopez's Italian father (the Godfather's Alex 'Tm Mo Greene' Roccol trying to pre-arrange to a boy from the old country. Lopez throws herself fully into the role of the obsessive compulsive wedding planner who has no life of her own. She handles both the comedy and sentiment equally well. Other than Out of Sight this is easily Lopez's most enjoyable performance.

Boy meets girl. Boy loses girl. Boy wins girl back.

That's one of the classic Hollywood formulas at its simplest and most elementary; an easy-to-follow blueprint used a million times.

And The Wedding Planner is nothing if not simple and formulaic, like some predictable mad-lib where characters and situations are merely plugged into to a pre-existing formula.

Two people who are perfect for each other (Jennifer Lopez, Matthew McConaughey) fall in emperimental part for the perfect formulaic plugged and she is his wedding planner. Uncomfortable situations follow as the two potential soul mates must spend time together with McConaughey's fiancee (who in one of the film's only movies cut out and pasted together.

McConaughey and Lopez share some nice moments, but not moments revealing enough to explain why they fall in love or why McConaughey would leave his fiancee.

They have one date, albeit a wonderfully perfect one in which they watch an old movie in the park and dance under the stars, but the characters don't really know each other any more in the predictable conclusion than they do at their contrived, unlikely meeting. They would be a start of the stars have some funny moments, mainly because of the stars charm rather than the dialogue, with a search for a statue that joke has been done better and some super glue drawing the biggest laughs. But even that joke has been done better and funnier in movies like The Nakad Gun and Goonies.

In the end, The Wedding Planner brings two bright stars and something old but nothing

Israeli Prime Minister Barak disrupts peace talks in order to continue current elections

On Sunday, Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak, after another failed round of peace talks between Israeli and Palestinian officials, called off all contact between the two groups until after

However, if Barak still loses, then he has lost his last chance as acting prime minister to make a move for peace.

If he is able to pull off a re-election, then he will still have to face a frustrated Palestine.

Palestinian President Yasser Arafat had some very harsh words for Israel on Sunday, accusing Israelis of waging a "fascist military aggression" during the past four months of clashes between the two nations. With no attempts to bridge the gaps between the two countries, the four months of clashes could turn into something much worse something much worse.

Barak's decision to back off from peace talks is especially troubling given the words he said yesterday.

"We have to take advantage of the chance to make peace with the Palestinians." Barak said. "If, God forbid, it becomes clear that it's not possible, then we will fight."

Despite the differences between the two countries, Arafat said this previous Sunday that he would be prepared to speak with Barak before the election.

Israel and Palestine have been two countries at odds with each Legally, marriage is defined in the United States as "..a contract made in due form of law, by which a free man and a free woman reciprocally engage to live with each other during their joint lives, in the union which ought to exist between husband and wife." That seems pretty clear: According to current law, two people of the same gender cannot marry. However, the last phrase of that definition over-reaches government authority.

Should two men, or two women, be allowed to marry?

This question has recently come to the forefront of the national debate on gay rights, and civil rights in general. Blood runs hot on both sides of the issue, as it should, considering what both sides perceive to be at stake. Those who support gay marriage view it as the greatest legal and social barrier to full acceptance of gays and equality. Those who oppose gay marriage (usually on moral or religious grounds) are worried it with the straight community. Those who oppose gay marriage (usually on moral or religious grounds) are worried it with the straight community on moral or religious grounds) are worried it society. The debate has begun to shape itself into a politicariage in Hawaii and Civil Unions in Vermont are used as ammunition and rallying cries to motivate legions of supporters on both sides. Many believe gay marriage will be the catalyst of an entire movement, rather like the Civil Rights campaign of the 50s and 80s, but marriage benefits only to couples of two genders, the government promotes a heterosexual lifestyle over another, which is something I think we can all agree is wrong. To me, the answer is clear: Either marriage must become a purely religious and private institution with no government benefits attached, or Congress must change the law to make legal marriage an inclusive organization which recognizes the validity of all forms of love and coupling. Most arguments against same-sex marriage stem from moral or religious objections. I have no problem with people moral or moral or religious objections. I have no problem with people think that if the moral control stance on homosexuality. As far as I'm concerned, it's fine to think that

Any time a government attempts to incorporate personal morals into law, it seriously undermines democracy; it implies that the citizens who are subject to the law are incapable of making appropriate life decisions for themselves. If this were the case, then why would we allow these same citizens to vote, and make decisions, which affect the future of the whole nation?

I realize that the debate on gay marriage will not end with this article. With opinions as hard and fast as they are, I may not even change the mind of a single soul. But that's fine; I live in a country where I have the right, and even the obligation, to make my voice heard.

Politics: The never-ending coyote syndrome

Ah, yes! It's post-election time! At last! You know, that time when politicians toss the rhetoric of bi-partisanship out the window for the remainder of their terms. The last several weeks have provided a splendid example. Mostly from the beloved left.

The Democratic party will do exactly the same this presidential term that they have for the last two: They will stage speeches and erect walls on every issue that no Democrat will cross. They will then complain of the unflinching partisanship of the Republicans. Pot calling kettle?

It reminds me of old playground arguments and the infamous line "it takes one to know one!" Yes, it takes an unflinchingly stubborn politician to tell you that someone else won't end of last year's budget battle, end of last year's budget battle. Two thoughts came to mind as I was sitting in the stands. One, why are the fans not rewarding Hawkins' hustle and energy and instead booing one of their own? Two, how embarsased I am to call myself a Kentucky fan if we are fans who boo their own players' Not to mention the fact that this player is one that shows more heart, emotion and pride to wear Kentucky blue than probably any other player on the team.

wear Kentucky blue than probably any other player on the team.

On a team that has been criticized for its lack of foughsess and heart, Smith is consistently the one player who never lacks these characteristics. To me, he is the epitome of a Wildeat. He exemplifies what so many others that have worn blue also did. Players like Farmer, Pelphrey, Ford, Feldhaus and Mills who never had the talent of a Mercer or Bogans but took pride in wearing Kentucky blue and the fans loved the word of the wear of the word of the word arena with boos, instead he focused his attention toward the win.

As a result, he handled the situation with class, unlike the fans in the stands who booed him and showed that they are anything but.

Saul's best yet

UK senior Saul Smith scored a career-high 18 points in Saturday's win over Vanderbilt. Rupp fans have shown Smith little appreciation of late.
