A Board of Trustees of the Student Union building fund has been selected as follows: Dr. Frank L. McVey, president of the University; D. H. Peak, business agent of the University; W. Emmet Milward, representative of the Student Union council; Gordon Burns, president of O. D. K.; Prof. R. D. McIntyre, faculty advisor of O. D. K.; Dean Sarah G. Phi Kappa Tau, Delta Tau Delta, Alpha Sigma Phi and Kappa Kappa Gamma were the first ones to pledge their support, while O. D. K. and Mortar Board were the latest honoraries to fall in line with the plan. Alpha Gamma Rho, Delta Zeta, Delta Tau Alpha, Alpha Omega, Delta Delta Delta, Alpha Omega, Chi Omega, and Kappa Delta also have pledged their support.

Among the honoraries, Tau Beta Pi, honorary scholastic engineering fraternity, and Kappa Kappa Psi, professional education society, have joined the ranks of supporters, the latter donating $50 in advance. Plans for joining the movement. Recent cash subscriptions also have come from Delta Delta Delta sorority and Delta Delta Delta fraternities. The fund had been increased previously by personal subscriptions connected with the University. (Continued on page Four)

Work Based on Samples from Wells Drilled Recently in State

Geology Survey

A Stratigraphic Analysis of Some Deep Wells Recently Drilled in Kentucky, by Reid P. Meacham, assistant professor of geology, is the title of a bulletin just issued by the Bureau of Mineral and Topographic Survey at the University. This bulletin is the first attempt in Kentucky to conduct a systematic examination of the deeply buried, non-outcropping, formations of the state by means of the "insoluble residue method."

Much interest has been shown in this new method of geology, which is in connection with their exploration for oil and gas because of the profitable results which have been obtained in geographically equivalent formations elsewhere. Professor Meacham's studies were based on samples from thirteen shallowly drilled wells, most of which were in central Kentucky.

With three exceptions, all drillings in Kentucky into the St. Peter or lower formations have not been productive as far as oil and gas were concerned. Wells drilled in this formation in the valleys of the Ohio, Licking, and Kentucky rivers have not only failed to turn up any flowing wells, and a number of wells drilled in the Blue Grass have been unproductive.

GENTLEMEN, OR?

We dislike to be eternally harping on what you should and should not do at the football games, but it seems to be absolutely necessary. First it was a plea to the students to show more pep and enthusiasm at the games, then a demonstration to members of St.Ky to "Consider the Spectator," and now we come to the matter of the throwing of bottles at the games!

The very phrase "throwing of bottles" sounds childlike and unworthy of the consideration of college students; nevertheless since a number of persons have persisted in this pastime, it becomes necessary to bring it to the attention of the student body.

It seems needless to remind anyone of the danger that bottles thrown on the field bring to the players. Anyone, drunk or sober, certainly should have enough respect for the members of his team not to expose them to the dangers of broken glass. In addition the very principle of the thing is degrading to the students and other spectators, and through them to the University.

At last Saturday's game Professor Lampert alone retrieved no less than a half dozen bottles which were heedlessly thrown from the stands onto the field. After the first one was thrown, it seemed to be some sort of an amusing game for some imbeciles to continue hurling bottles on the field just to see some conscientious person walk out and carry them off.

Most of us realize the reputation that most southern schools hold already in the minds of the people of the country at large in regard to the behavior of the crowds at football games. It is an absolute certainty that this sort of behavior is not going to add, other than negatively, to this reputation.

We recently read that two southern institutions (and we don't mean insane asylums) were forced to pass resolutions prohibiting the sale of soft drinks at games in other than paper containers. This action was made necessary to prevent the usual injuries from flying bottles that had occurred at the games. Is the University of Kentucky going to be forced to do this? We appeal to your common-sense, courtesy, and integrity to prohibit in the future such insane and idiotic actions as have been brought to your attention in this editorial.

A SURE ENOUGH TEACHER

The following editorial appeared in a recent issue of the Stanford Interior Journal. It is reprinted in The Kernel over the blushing protests of our modest instructors.

"The Lexington Herald's Sunday edition carried a picture of Enoch Grehan, professor of journalism at the University of Kentucky, in a series of 'University Personalities' along with something of Grehan's activities in the University and the various societies that interest the average college man.

"Enoch Grehan is a sure-enough teacher in his chosen line. As an honor man at Transylvania in English, one of its best speakers and debaters, he led his class and his school. Soon after graduation, if he indeed before, he became associated with Lexington newspapers, where he learned actual daily practice lessons he has been able to impart to Kentucky youths seeking a career in the newspaper field.

"The College of Journalism at the University of Kentucky has been almost as successful in having its graduates meet the test of the demands as Om Paul Anderson's college of engineering. It's graduates have made good. Keen Johnson, at Richmond, is one of them. Sterling Towles, at Danville, is another. The Courier-Journal office is full of them. In Kentucky they are managing, editing or reporting for newspapers.

"We believe it is not too much to say that the success of this college has been due to the fact that its head and its teachers have had practical experience in what they are teaching. Grehan was a reporter on the old Lexington Transcript under the late Colonel W. P. Walton. He was head of the news desk on the Leader, when the late Sam J. Roberts owned it. He was city editor and managing editor of them, and all over the Lexington Herald, with Desha Brockbridge, and there is hardly a newspaper situation that could arise with which he is not fully competent to deal.

"Associated with him is Miss McLaughlin, thoroughly experienced in practical newspaper work, and Victor R. Portmann, who is the third member of the faculty of the college. Though not a native Kentuckian, as are the others, he won the regard of the Kentucky Press association to such an extent that he is a leader in that organization and editor of its official publication.

"We are not an opponent of 'book larnin' but if we had our choice, in the matter of newspaper teaching, between a highly educated teacher and a man who had had actual newspaper experience, we would take the experienced every time. But when the experienced newspaper man combines with his knowledge of actual work on a newspaper a high degree of education, that combination is one that is bound to succeed, and that is why Grehan and his associates have made a real success of the College of Journalism at the University of Kentucky."

A VITAL QUESTION

The people of Lexington, on next Tuesday, November 7, will be called upon to decide a vital question in the life of their city. The N. R. A. Public Works Bond issue comes up for the decision of the people. By their vote they will decide whether or not they are good business men and women; if they are willing to put the common good above the interest of the individual; and whether the tax rate should be increased 10 cents or 20 cents.

Now...in regard to your love life

Many a girl would confess to boredom at resting her shapely head against nothing but the usual plain-colored shirts. So Arrow is giving the ladies—and you—a welcome change with a dazzling new assortment of fancy (but not too fancy) shirts. Subdued stripes, neat patterns, small checks and plaids. All Sanforized Shrink—which means no shrinkage—ever!

In regard to the first factor mentioned, it is doubtless true that this bond issue is good business from every angle. What business man, if told he could borrow money at the rate of four per cent with 30 per cent given to him as an outright gift, would refuse it? The answer is quite obviously none. That is exactly the proportion the Federal Government is making to the city of Lexington. Out of a total grant of $1,875,000, the national government will give a direct gift $562,500, on which there will be no interest or repayment. The remainder of the amount is to be paid in installments, each year for 25 years, and beginning in 1939. The city needs all the improvements that have been planned. It is safe to say that this is the best bond issue on which Lexington has ever had a chance to vote.

Times such as these have been known in the past several years, demand that the common interest be placed above the interest of the individual. This is certainly not the time or the place for consideration of the interests of a selfish few individuals. This Public Works program will give jobs to 1,400 local men, for a period of two years. Eighty per cent of this money or $1,500,000 must be spent for labor, as this is required by the national government. Think what that amount of money would mean to the business of Lexington. It would mean that business in this city would be materially aided. Better business means prosperity and this certainly is something all will agree is highly desirable.

The tax increase for the next five years is small. The present city commissioners believe that it will be unnecessary to increase the taxes to take care of the 10 per cent rise. Interest on $1,312,500 at four per cent is $52,500 which is all that will be paid for the next five years. If this is not adopted the city will have to spend approximately $150,000 for relief funds. This necessitates an increase in the tax rate of something like 20 cents. Then, too, would you rather have new sewers, a new jail, two new community centers, and a public health center, for a possible 10 cent increase in the tax rate or absolutely no improvements for a 20 cent increase?

Are the people of Lexington, good business men and women? Are they willing to put the public good above the private individual gain? Do you desire an increase of ten cents in the tax rate or a 20 cent increase? All these questions you will be called upon to decide on next Tuesday, November 7. Consider these questions before you vote!

A recent experiment proved that few college students could spell correctly the word "cognac," but we wager that they would know how to handle the stuff, if opportunity afforded.

There is really no excuse for its poor fellows walking, when it is so easy to win a nice, new automobile in word-building contests via radio.

Were The Kernel to please every reporter who aspires to see his name over a column, it would have to edit a 20 page daily, devoted exclusively to features.

OCTOBER DAY

Oh, it was a splendid October morning! She smiled happily to herself as she started across the campus, and noticed with genuine pleasure how lovely the trees were, decked in their gay multi-colored fall wear. The breeze whisked about her, tending to pull her hair, pulling at her smart fur jacket, but its brisk frolicsome amuse her. She stopped at the entrance to the Botanical gardens and looked at her watch. She'd have to wait a few moments for him, but she didn't mind that.

Suddenly a bell rang, and figures poured out of the building, scurrying away to another class. She began to walk slowly about, searching for a familiar gray topcoat which somehow evaded her eager eyes. The minutes went speeding by and then another bell marked the beginning of a new class hour.

Slowly she walked away. Queer how cold the wind felt—and the trees weren't so lovely as she had thought... the leaves were all falling to the ground... Just another October day... she shivered in the sudden grayness.

The Princess Marries the Page, by Edna St. Vincent Millay.
This play of one act, written in poetic idylls of a romance between a beautiful Princess and a Prince in disguise. It was written during Miss Millay's college days at Vassar College and produced several times, but was never published.

RED ELEPHANTS ON THE WALL... by Craddock

Graceful and pretty are the words describing this youthful work. 1932. Biography, by S. N. Behrman.

The heroine is a charming easy-going woman who has had many casual love-affairs and won some fame as a portrait painter, Richard Kurt, young journalist, engages Marion to write her biography.

The complexities which arise because of various interested persons produce many good lines. This was one of the most successful plays in New York last winter, 1933. (Rental Collection).

Both Your Houses, by Maxwell Anderson.
The play is based upon the story of a young idealistic Nevada teacher elected to Congress. Beaten by combined forces of the old order of corruption, he attempts to outwit the lobbyists at their own game and is defeated. In plain words it is a crook play full of witty remarks. The author was the winner of the 1932 Pulitzer prize. 1933. (Rental Collection).

TRAVEL
Arctic Village, by Robert Marshall.
The author spent more than a year among the inhabitants of Kookruk Valley, Alaska, about the only community of this precise sort on earth. The book is not only an interesting account of life—rough, raw, and ready, where a few happy men and women eke out an existence, but it is a gold mine for sociology students, because of the wealth of detail about social relations in a simple settlement. It has humor as well as dignity and nobility. 1933. (Browsing Room).

Twenty Years A-growing, by Maurice O'Sullivan.
Growing up as a native of the Blasket Islands, which lie off the coast of Ireland, the author recalls memories of every aspect of life on the Island—fishing, rounding up sheep, hunting thrushes in the dark, match-making, etc. All of it has a high spirited freshness and sensibility of nature. 1933. Sallie Brown is a girl you all know. Every University girl isn't just like her, but every University girl has her good sized group of Sallies. She goes in for a lot of activities, lots of the boys like her, she's a sorority woman, spends every moment of the day going places about the campus and in general keeping in the swim.

Sallie's not at home much, for various school functions keep her pretty busy, and when she is there, she has things to think about, and to do, so her family doesn't see much of her. Being an attractive girl, and having a sharp tongue makes those snappy comebacks part of her list of careless, unintentional remarks. All very well around school, but one night she happened to make one of them to her mother. Sallie's mother is the type of woman who does everything on earth to see that her little daughter has the things she needs and wants most, and the remark hurt.

Sallie's not at home much, for various school functions keep her pretty busy, and when she is there, she has things to think about, and to do, so her family doesn't see much of her. Being an attractive girl, and having a sharp tongue makes those snappy comebacks part of her list of careless, unintentional remarks. All very well around school, but one night she happened to make one of them to her mother. Sallie's mother is the type of woman who does everything on earth to see that her little daughter has the things she needs and wants most, and the remark hurt.

There followed one of those typical mother and daughter scenes, wherein Sallie tried to say that she meant nothing by her careless behavior, and her mother pointed out that such indifference were not uncommon, they had been passed over before. They were getting nowhere fast when her father interferred.

"Sallie," he said, "don't you suppose that after living 40 years we have something to offer you?"

"You ought," said the mother, "to close up that school entirely, and put you all to work. Let you find out what it's to be on your own, to see how far all you smart children who are so sufficient unto yourselves would get."

"What I'm getting at," continued her father, "is this. It costs money to keep you in school. Money for your sorority, money for everything else. But we'll skip that. We think the University is a great place, and all that, but if you weren't in it, it would have practically no interest in it at all.

"Of course, dad."

"Well then, you can be the greatest student they ever had out there. You can make a million dollars, and become the finest woman teacher in the world, and we'll be proud of you. But what satisfaction do we get out of you, we parents? Where is our compensation except in what you do for us in return?"

"You've had us too long. You've taken us for granted. You've missed the finer appreciation that is due us. When you're in a tight place, we're here. We want to be your pals, but you never think of cultivating our friendship.

"Somehow, you give impressions of toleration for us. It's all a part of this new generation. I suppose I've never quite understood it until now, but I think this must be a good example of your attitudes. I hate to pull the when I was a boy on you, but we showed a respect for our folks that you youngsters have skipped. Now, I've used a lot of good energy and talked for eleven minutes by my watch, what do you make of all I've said?"

"I think," said Sallie, "that you mean that in going places and doing things, I have thought more of my own personal good times and impressions I am making on other people than I have of you and mother. I have missed the thing that makes the wheels go around for me, which is that you and mother are living your own younger days over again in me."

"Good. Exactly the point. Change that radio program, will you, monkey?"
