THE NATIONAL ELECTION AND STUDENT VOTERS

This year, more than any of the yester-generations, the student body of the university should be interested in the forthcoming national election, Tuesday, November 8. Now is the time when the educated vote should be most pronounced in the selection of a President and a Congress because the educated vote should know the best remedy for the present economic situation.

Enthusiasm is at a high pitch among the general public as to the outcome. What with the various polls being taken by leading newspapers and prominent magazines and the campaign under way with full speed ahead, a pre-election outlook is being obtained. It is up to the individual students to study the party platforms; compare the candidates as to respective abilities and records; choose that party which appears to present the most constructive plan for better government and the handling of a strained economic situation. Having chosen his standard bearer, the student should do all that is possible to forward that interest.

In this country, where no law limits the privileges of voting save under-age, the loss of citizenship, or insanity, a great many persons ballot who really know little or nothing about government. The mass is not capable of intellectual choice. Politicians and tabloid sheets form the opinions and issues, present them to the people, and the latter accept.

Here the educated vote, coming to the fore with each succeeding year, might play a messiah role. The intelligent vote in mass balloting is far in the minority. But it can help to regulate conditions and make overtures toward better national government by unbiased research into party platforms. The educated vote will emerge from the study with the party that has the best potentiality; the intelligent group can form and mould its opinions and proffer them to the people. The mass will follow a leader.

Without regard as to party affiliations, party ideals and whatnot, every student of the University of Kentucky who is of legal age should make use of his privilege of voting November 8. The college vote is an educated vote.

TIME AND TIDE

Undoubtedly, there are only a few persons who are not acquainted with the well-worn axiom, "Time and tide wait for no man," and those to whom it is unfamiliar know well its application.

Its significance can be taken to heart by college students—upper-classmen as well as freshmen—for it warns them that college credits and degrees aren't handed to students like free lemonade at a church social. It's a sorry collegian who finds too late that he has frittered away his college year, and he soon learns that a last minute cramming is like last minute Christmas shopping—unsatisfactory.

There is another proverb which runs "A good horse has no need of a spur." Newcomers in college are expected to be "good horses." No one is going to urge them to study. It is their own responsibility. The wise ones start with a firm foundation. They work each assignment as carefully as a good bricklayer places each brick. They realize they are the architects of their own fortunes. They best time and tide at their own game.

HAIL TO THE QUEEN!

With outstretched hands filled with gypsy-tinted leaves and glory of goldenrod we joyously hail the returning of October's bright blue weather. The hard lusty of the summer sun is dead; the merriest heat of August is sleeping, and we are suspended in the mist of a world of waiting. More feeling than knowing—scarcely understanding but exquisitely aware that somewhere, in the high bright arch of heaven, in the still mellow sunshine roundout, in the world that men's intelligence cannot taint, the miracle of Autumn is happening. It is performed annually, yet astonishingly it comes as an experience wonderfully new, embroidered still in age-old, impenetrable mystery.

Throughout the year we are inwardly aware of the deep-seated preparations that are being made for this glorious consummation of our year's achievement; when we are actually face to face with the realization of these preparations we are again full to running over with the awe it inspires.

For a little while we are blessed beings enjoying the attentions of the gods as we witness this miracle. A little while, and it is gone—gone as it has come, mysteriously, silently, unknowably, leaving us with the feeling that we have been allowed to witness something too hallowed for human eyes.

We cannot fathom this miracle of Autumn; we can only stand uncovered in the Presence and glory in its glory while it is here. Tomorrow it will pass on.

ANTICS AND ATTITUDES

Dear Editor:

I am only a Freshman in the University, but Saturday was not my first game. During the course of my more or less hectic high school career, I have been privileged to witness some fifteen football games in which the Wildcat squad took part. Of this sum total of sixteen or thereabouts, I can say without hesitation, that the game that I enjoyed least of all was the one played Saturday with V. M. I. College football is a beautiful, dignified game. It is observed from a distance, and the players do not appear to one's consciousness as tattered, dirty-faced, and weary individuals, as do most high school players, but rather as figures (as on a chess board) that move back and forth without apparent effort. There is a majesty about such a game.

Saturday was a perfect day. The huge stadium, the music of the "Best Band in Dixie," the trim uniformed figures warming-up on the field, the arrival of the white-clad referees, all combined to form a perfect setting for an afternoon's sport. Then, suddenly upon this came burst two or three soiled-looking urchins, who dashed in and out among the players, chased by mundry officials. Their attempt to secure free entrance was, unfortunately, successful, and their comrades outside the gates, emboldened by this, burst through also and dashed out on the field. Some were caught and led protesting away; others had to be badgeoned by the gate-keepers before they could be taken out; and still others, successful in their attempts to elude "the long arm of the law," hindered the officials in the discharge of their duty.

After about fifteen minutes of this, during which fights had occurred in all parts of the field, the opening whistle sounded, and sent all the participants in this ludicrous performance scurrying to find seats. All during the first half, attention was distracted from the rather slow game by the antics of these unwanted guests. When the half was called, and the regular players left the field, a swarm of mundry, like of which is seen only in the slum sections of some large city, descended and took possession.

session of the field. Then the crime of all crimes occurred. Kentuckians broke the law of hospitality, so sacred to all true Southerners. In vain did the Cadet sub attempt between-halves practice. In every direction "les enfents terrible" mimicked the plays of the foregoing half. Our guests literally stumbled over the prostrate forms of dirty little boys, of negroes, and of some few representatives of the weaker sex. Under such conditions no practice was possible. They were our guests; according to the law of hospitality they should have been given our best. Instead we gave them our worst—and we call ourselves Kentuckians! What an impression for the Virginians to take home!

When I entered the University I must have been laboring under a delusion. I thought Stoll field was the University of Kentucky Football field—not a playground for all the riff-raff of Lexington and the surrounding communities. (Signed): A FRESHMAN.

The Chios are indignant. Only three boxes were reserved at the game Saturday. Two of these boxes had been filled when the Limestone ladies arrived and impressively seated their rshettes. Their box proved to be the other reserved one.

Managing editor Marvin Wachs approves of freshmen. The room was crowded with underlings when he asked "Outside, please" of the university telephone operator. The frosh departed.

I owe Don Marquis an apology. Had someone tell me that last week's column was as silly as his stuff. If you haven't read the letters of Marquis' Archie, the cockroach who in a former life was a vers libre poet, by all means read them. The book's a masterpiece.

China dogs, stuffed dogs, dogs of all types and sizes were grouped around the room. Tallies, wall pictures, bribe-brac, and door steps were of canine type.
