FOREWORD

The Council on Public Higher Education and the State Board of Education have revised the program of certification with a sincere desire to improve the quality of teacher education. This represents an approach to the improvement of the quality of instruction in the classrooms of elementary and secondary schools.

This bulletin contains the certification laws included in the Kentucky Revised Statutes and certification regulations adopted by the State Board of Education from time to time within the framework of these laws. This bulletin contains all certification regulations brought up-to-date. They are presented as guides to teacher education institutions in the training of teachers and as a basis for the certification of teachers who desire to become legally qualified to teach in the public schools of the Commonwealth.

BOSWELL B. HODGKIN

Superintendent of Public Instruction

INTRODUCTION

The Cooperative Study in teacher education, sponsored by the State Board of Education, the Council on Public Higher Education, and the General Education Board, covered the four-year period 1943-47. The study had a two-fold purpose: (1) to determine if the quality of living in a community could be improved through a school program which is related to everyday problems of living and (2) to develop the kind of teacher education programs necessary to prepare teachers to teach in schools of this type. Seven colleges, six county school systems, and two individual schools in the seventh county were pilot colleges and schools in the development of this study. The Cooperative Study moved toward revising and improving the teacher education and certification program step by step. Much work was done on the following problems:

1. Determining the characteristics of a good school
2. Suggesting the characteristics of a teacher of a good school
3. Suggesting the needed emphasis in teacher education which will tend to develop the kind of teacher needed for a good school
4. Suggesting changes in the curriculums for teacher education and certification

This study was directed by Dr. R. E. Jagers, who served as Director of the Division of Teacher Education and Certification until September 19, 1947. The following excerpt from Teacher Education Circular No. 72, prepared by Dr. Jagers, is significant in showing the process used in arriving at the certification regulations contained in this bulletin:

"The four years spent on the Teacher Education Study brought a large number of persons together. Persons within each college worked together; people from many colleges worked together; State Department staff and college staffs worked together; college staffs and State Department staff worked with people in the elementary and secondary schools; and all worked together. Every level of the schools and every area of learning came together in trying to find ways and means of preparing a teacher to meet the needs of the service. There has thus developed a point of view which has had wide acceptance among school people in Kentucky at every level. This point of view may be expressed in this fashion. The education of a teacher is of sufficient importance that every resource possible must be used in her preparation, and every person who is touched by the teacher should be concerned with her preparation. It seems to be the accepted belief that we should use the community pattern of action (working together) in formulating the program of learning for the prospective teacher."

The recommendations of the various committees for certification curriculums were made to the Advisory Committee during the summer and fall of 1947. The recommendations were approved by the Council on Public Higher Education on November 25, 1947, and adopted by the State Board of Education, December 19, 1947.

These certification curriculums are flexible, set up in broad terms. A great deal of freedom has been left to each college in adapting its program of teacher education to the needs of the students preparing to enter the teaching profession. The certification requirements contained in this bulletin are offered as guides in the preparation of administrators and teachers of Kentucky's children and young people.
