Knights in armor performing bruising full contact medieval fighting are alive and well at UK.

They do battle twice a week or more on the lawn in front of the Administration Building and next to the Student Center.

The Society for Creative Anachronisms is a student organization with about 50 members that come together several times a week to re-enact medieval scenes.

Fighting is only a small portion of what the organization is about.

"The Society for Creative Anachronisms is for people wanting to take the Middle Ages and act them out in their daily lives," said Tabitha Stapleton, an English senior, who is the Student Activities Board liaison for the SCA.

"We try to make it as natural as possible and still be realistic."

The organization researches any medieval place or time between 600 and 1600 A.D. and then practice what they learn.

"Some of the best historians in the nation are in SCA," Stapleton said. "Because instead of

Feuding over funding part of UK history

Editor's note: The following is the first in a two-part series on the politics of funding for higher education.

By Matt Felice
News Editor

In the pre-publication draft of his new book, "You Can't Do

That, Governor," former Gov. Wallace Wilkinson slams former UK President David Roselle as one who "typified for me the arrogance and insensitivity of many in the university community."

Wilkinson further accuses him of using his candidacy for the top job at the University of Delaware as an attempt to "extort a higher budget from (the state) under the threat that he would leave the University if it wasn't forthcoming."

Roselle, who is currently the president of the University of Delaware, has a different recollection of the events of the fall of 1989.

"The Wilkinson administration went after the University's budget with a significant vigor," Roselle said Tuesday in a phone interview.

"It was a purely political thing — it was calculated that that was the best play."

Feuding between UK presidents and Kentucky governors over the budget is as old as the hills, but University officials agree that the Wilkinson-Roselle years were the most intense in recent times.

And the man who defended Roselle against the governor's attacks — then Board of Trustees member Larry Forgy — is now running for governor himself.

"That was possibly one of the most interesting and controversial periods in UK history," Forgy said Tuesday.

Not every governor created so many problems for the residing LARRY FORGY stood before the University's Board of Trustees in 1975 and resigned as UK vice president to practice law in Louisville.

UK President, he said. "You'll find that the Nunn administration was very generous with higher education."

To this day the former UK trustee and vice president of business affairs stands by his claim that Wilkinson had been stacking the board with supporters of the governor and opponents of Roselle.

Wilkinson admitted at the time that Forgy's comments along those lines were exactly the reason he didn't re-appoint him to the Board of Trustees in December of 1989. (Forgy had been appointed by Gov. Martha Layne Collins.)

"Larry, given any type of situation that comes up, is not afraid to speak his mind," Roselle said.

He points to that as the main reason the Student Government Association — then headed by Sean Lohman — awarded Forgy the Zumwinkle Student Rights Award in 1990.

"I think there was a feeling on the part of the student leadership that I had been somewhat effective in blunting the governor's intrusions into the internal affairs of the University," Forgy said.

Student support of the administration had climaxed just months earlier when in December 1989 more than 400 students rallied outside the Administration Building, asking Roselle not to take the job in Delaware and criticizing the governor's reluctance to provide sufficient state support for higher education.

Picket signs reading: "Dear Wally, SEND MONEY!" "We Think You're Swell, Dr. Roselle," and "DAVE: Don't Do Delaware," illustrated the overall sentiment.

Looking back, Roselle said "it was not difficult to have the students understand the nature of our problem with state support."

Wilkinson's 1988 budget had given UK its first zero increase in history.

Nevertheless, Roselle managed to enjoy his rapport with students and staff.

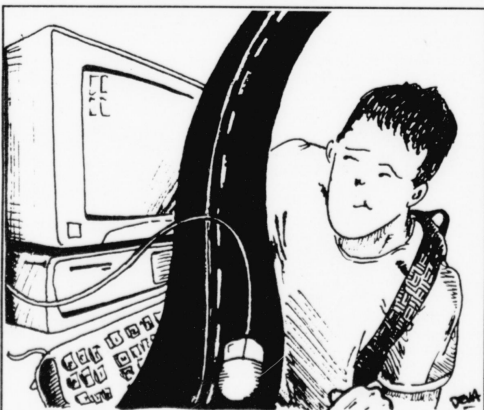

"They were good times," he said.

But recalling his difficulties with the governor, he simply stated "they were interesting times."

Legal services to expand

By Sara Spears
Campus Editor

There are several renovation projects going on around campus, including a major renovation of the Student Government Association's budget.

Several changes have been made to the budget compared to last year, including a $13,000 increase to the student legal service. The budget for the legal service last year was $12,000, this year the increase has boosted the available funds to $25,000.

The service, which expanded from two days to four last year, is also partially funded by a grant from the Kentucky Bar Association. SGA is unsure how much the service will receive from KBA this year, but it was granted $5,000 last year.

Student Legal Adviser Cyndi Weaver said the service aids about 25 students a week. The service offers students someone to talk to about their legal problems ranging from domestic violence to drinking and driving.

What the service doesn't do, however, is undertake representation. The service will recommend free legal counsel, but UK's Legal Service will not represent clients in court.

With this extra money, SGA plans to expand and renovate a new office for the service and develop two new services within the legal aid.

The student pro-bono program would allow UK students to obtain legal help from current UK law students. SGA also plans a mediation service to allow two conflicting parties to sit down with a legal mediator to try and settle differences out of court.

Currently, the legal service uses the back room in the SGA office for its clientele, but Chaney said that the new office would ensure more confidentiality for the clients.

"We feel like this would make students feel much more comfortable using the service if they knew that their identity was going to be confidential," Chaney said.

Also, Chaney said that extra room would be needed to coordinate the new services because there is not enough room within the SGA offices to do so.

The decision to place the extra $13,000 into legal services was due to high student demand, Chaney said.

The addition of the $13,000 was made possible by cutting almost $10,000 in SGA scholarship funds, which SGA plans to regenerate through the private sector.

One scholarship that has always gained a lot of attention, especially with the work done by last year's Executive Director of Student Services Amy Abernathy to raise money for it, is the Child Care Grants, which were cut from $5,400 to $2,100.

When asked the reason cuts were given to the Child Care Grants, Chaney said, that "the average student would benefit more seeing their fees put toward student services instead of toward Child Care Grants."

Chaney also said SGA plans to raise all of the money that was cut from scholarships so scholarship money will be available in the fall.

Weaver said she thinks the more money was needed was to better serve the students.

"We had a large demand to expand hours last year and we filled all of the new openings we had," Weaver said. "I'm sure that if we provide even more hours, they will fill up as well."

State offers unique fests

By Claire Johnston
Special Projects Editor

Festivals have traditionally been chances for small-town communities to gather and celebrate tradition, but festivals also offer a chance for outsiders to escape the city and see everything from balloon chases to canoe races.

Although most festivals throughout the state are not in full swing until the fall, there are still celebrations close to Lexington that make the perfect weekend road trip.

Kicking off the festivals is the eighth annual Freedom Fest tomorrow through July 4 in Murray, Ky.

The fest will include 24 events, including helicopter rides, old-fashioned street fairs and fireworks.

The fest will also host country singer Ricky Van Shelton this Saturday at 7:30 p.m. at Murray State's Roy Stuart Theater.

Tickets are $12 and $20 for a box seat in advance and $15 and $25 at the door.

Judy Gargus, Freedom Fest director believes that the fest will be a perfect opportunity for students to escape their usual scenery and enjoy five days of activity.

"It will be jam-packed days of activity," Gargus said. "Once you're here you won't lack anything to do."

To get to Murray, take Bluegrass Parkway west to the Western Kentucky Parkway, then to I-24 west to the Purchase Parkway into Murray.

For more information, call 1-800-715-5004.

The Festival of the Horse in Georgetown and the Woollyworm Festival in Beattyville are not until September, but Carlisle will hold the Blackberry Festival July 3-8.

The fest will include street dancing, parades and carnival rides in the downtown square.

To get to Carlisle from Lexington, take I-68 east to Paris, then to Millersburg.

For information on the fest, call (606) 289-2384.

If you would rather pass a weekend near the Ohio River, the Paducah Summer Festival will be held July 21-30.

The festival offers over 66 activities, such as cross-river swim, hot air balloons and sky divers.

The fest will also offer a UK

Lexington to host ATP tourney

By Kip Perkins
Sports Editor

Kentucky is already known for great basketball and great horseracing, and soon it will be known for great tennis.

During the first week of August, Lexington will host the $50,000 Men's Professional Tennis Challenger at the Downing Outdoor Tennis Complex on South Campus.

"For the first time, Lexington is going to have a major tennis tournament," said Mayor Pam Miller.

The tournament will be sponsored by Fifth Third Bank of Lexington and will feature the world's 18th ranked doubles team, Luke and Murphy Jensen.

Tournament Director Dennis Emery said this event will showcase "good young players on the challenger level."

The challenger level of competition might be best defined as the minor leagues of professional tennis. It is the second level of professional competition after collegiate tennis.

"The challenger has super players," said Paul Florie, a challenger coordinator. "This is where you'll see the Agassis and Sampras of tomorrow, because (they) all played in challenger."

This challenger event has been held the past two years in Cincinnati. Emery said the tournament organizers were impressed with previous tennis exhibitions in Lexington as well as the "Keeneland-type motif" that could be developed here.

"We want to take this event, build this event and make it a great event over the coming years," Emery said.

Local sponsors and Lexington officials are excited about the opportunities the new event will provide within the community, both financially and socially.

"This event will not only have an economic impact on our local community, but it will also provide a much-needed sports outlet for all of our sports enthusiasts in Central Kentucky," said Fifth

Third Bank President Sam Barnes.

Not only will the local economy get a boost throughout the week-long event, Kentucky's Habitat for Humanity will benefit from a portion of the proceeds. Event organizers hope to turn over $30,000 to Habitat for Humanity.

Emery is also confident that the tournament will "get everyone together in the town."

Qualifying matches will be on Aug. 1-2. The Challenger event, consisting of 32 main draw singles players and 16 doubles teams, will continue through Aug. 6.

Ticket prices currently stand at $5 per session and $15 for the final day. Series tickets can be purchased for $35 and will include admission for the week and two parking passes.

"We're fired up to be there," said Luke Jensen via phone from London. "We have played a lot of tournaments in the Kentucky area, and we love the big blue area."

Forget about the Fourth if you're a student athlete

Athletics are an important part of the high school experience. High school athletes can find their niche and build self-esteem through sport, and a precious few parlay their skills into a free ride to a college education. And to think, all a high school student has to do to make the team is have some talent, work hard and get a little lucky.

IN OUR OPINION

And, lest we forget, give up his or her rights as an American citizen.

At least, that's what the Supreme Court decided earlier this week when it ruled that high schools have the right to randomly test athletes, but not other high school students, for illegal drugs.

Attention class, or at least those of you that dribble, pass, run or jump: You may turn to the back of your history books and eliminate the following passage:

"The right of people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized."

That's the Fourth Amendment, and it no longer applies to those high school students who wish to get in the game, thanks to the Supreme Court's decision that a high school may act en loco parentum, or in place of the parents, when it comes to drug-testing an athlete.

That means a school needs parental permission to paddle an unruly student, but not to test a basketball player for drugs — with or without probable cause.

It's bad enough that the Supreme Court has allowed high school students to be tested without parental consent.

But to single out only those students who participate in sports is a double slap in the face.

If you ask us, en loco parentum is just plain loco.

Bosnia's own fight

Two kids, about six or seven, stood in their neighborhood park, hitting each other with great enthusiasm. Another kid about their same age sat to one side, looking a bit bruised and occasionally stepping up to take a shot at one of the first two. Some smaller kids from nearby houses watched at a distance, looking sheepish.

Three or four teenagers walked by and saw the action and decided that they should try to stop it. The teenagers started by throwing rocks at the pugilists if they lashed out with frog punches or started kicking. That didn't work, so they stepped in between the two and got popped a few good times in the process. The fight eased up, but the little gladiators kept yelling and punching wildly.

So the fight was circumvented for a while. But the teenagers got hungry and went home to their neighborhoods and the enemies went right back to work with the same vigor. The fact of the matter was that pulling them apart didn't solve the underlying problems or erase the animosity between them.

Ponder this parable for the situation in the former Yugoslavia or "war torn Bosnia" as the press currently prefer to call the most volatile part of that region. And consider it a good argument for the United Nations and NATO to get the heck out of the Balkans before they waste any more money or non-Balkan lives.

Bosnia is a traditionally Muslim region that was part of Yugoslavia at one time, but by no means was it an exclusively Muslim area. Before and after Yugoslavia was created, Croats, Serbs and others mingled with one another there. Animosity among groups in the Balkans has smoldered for hundreds of years and even created the spark that lit the fires of World War I.

Kevin Cullen
Kernel Columnist

Eventually, a man named Tito brought the nation together largely by means of a cult of personality. And when he died Yugoslavia soon followed him to the grave.

People in the Balkan states have many legitimate bones to pick with one another and no side is entirely innocent. The European and North American press like to use phrases like "ethnic cleansing" and "war crimes" to describe the situation, but it's really just civil war, plain and simple.

Civil wars cannot be solved by means of outside force. If the underlying problems continue to exist, then fights will always return. Decades of unity and prosperity didn't eliminate Yugoslavia's problems and neither can some lightly-armed men wearing blue helmets — or a division of Marines, for that matter.

These people are fighting over land that is precious to their hearts and minds. Each side thinks the other is an interloper. Who on the outside has the wisdom or right say which ethnic group should predominate? And even if someone could decide, how would they end the fighting?

What the United Nations is doing is the equivalent of providing the two little boys with boxing gloves, water boys, a referee and between-round snacks. Shipping in food (which is inevitably seized by the armies at hand), confiscating heavy weapons and manning observation posts will do nothing more than prolong the conflict.

Harsh as it may sound, the one way to end the war is to let it burn itself out. The U.N. shouldn't feel bad. They didn't step in when they watched the Palestinians get kicked out of their holy land in the 1940s. They have shed no tears over 26 years of British military occupation in Northern Ireland, and they never sent blue helmets to South Africa because seven-eighths of the population didn't have the right to vote and were ruled by a race of outsiders.

Take the food and U.N./NATO troops out of the Balkans. Refuse to sell them any more weapons, if the Russians will agree. Then wait to see how long this war lasts. When the Serb and Muslim soldiers see civilians, huddled starving and bleeding in their ruined homes, dying by the hundreds and the thousands, they will realize that those people are their mothers, brothers and children.

Only that can make them stop, for what is more precious: land or family?

Knights

SCA has a variety of medieval events

just researching and writing a paper, they can live out history."

Worldwide, the SCA has more than 70,000 members. Each region has a kingdom with an honor system set up.

The regions have kings, queens and princes.

In order to become king, you must enter the crown tournament that is a battle every six months.

The winner is prince for six months and then king for the remaining six.

You don't have to be a fighter to be active in SCA, though. It has arts and sciences which involves making costumes, cooking, leather and iron working, feasts and dances.

"A lot of people just like the idea of chivalry and the honor system," Stapleton said.

"And a lot of members just show up for socializing."

Alison Grande, a library science graduate student and member of SCA, said anyone that likes medieval things and events should at least check out the organization.

Grande participates in the fighting aspect of SCA.

"If you're frustrated and you've had a bad day," she said. "It makes for a good way to vent those frustrations."

Grande's form of venting includes 40-70 pounds of armor and equipment that she mostly made herself.

She engages in full contact combat with another SCA member.

"It's exhausting," she said. "You get hit and you get hit hard. Sometimes it really hurts, but most of the time it's a lot of fun."

Stapleton said one of the group's best fighters is a 4'11" woman who weighs 90 pounds.

"We've had huge rugby players who have come and watched and said that it doesn't look safe," Stapleton said.

However, she added that the group in Lexington has never had a wound major enough to warrant a hospital trip.

"Nobody walks out of here without bruises, though."

People from all walks of life are SCA members.

The Lexington area has members who are students, carpenters, engineers and a metro policeman.

Aaron Scheon, an English junior, said it's an interesting place to learn new skills.

"It's a good place to meet people," he said.

"If there's anything you want to know concerning the Middle Ages there are people here who are experts on it."

Stapleton said anyone can join

SCA.

The group has a closet full of medieval garb you can wear and loaner armor if you're interested in the fighting end.

In the summer, the group meets on Tuesday at 7:00 p.m. in front of the Student Center; Wednesday nights for fighter practice on the Student Center lawn from 6:00 to dark; Sunday fighter practice on the Administration lawn at 1:00 p.m.

Sherman's Alley by Gibbs 'N' Voigt

I just bought something at the Pay 'N' Leave. Mavis gave me Canadian coins as change!

At least you were paid in actual currency.

Today, they slip you their phony-baloney Monopoly money. Tomorrow, Alan Thicke is tapping your phone!

Last week, you said Monty Hall.

That unprotected border worries me. Saskatchewan has been a little too quiet lately. And North Dakota's just ripe for the taking.

Americanada

Personally, it's Manitoba that gives me the willies.

That sarcastic tongue won't last when you become Doug Henning's personal housepet.

ATTENTION NEW STUDENTS

There are 2 things you'll definitely need while at UK:

1. A Backpack to carry your 100 lbs. of books across campus.
2. The Kentucky Kernel New Students' Edition. It'll help you not feel so "lost" on campus. You'll find it in a Kernel rack during orientation registration and at your test sites.

The Kentucky Kernel is the independent daily student newspaper of the University of Kentucky. If you are interested in writing, layout /design, graphic arts or advertising call 257-1915. We are always looking for fresh, new faces.
