University expands HMO plan

The plan actually is an extension of UK's existing Health Mainte-

Effective immediately, the plan may be purchased by private-sector businesses and groups at a cost that is about 3 to 10 percent less than other local HMOs.

After a season of "tremendous success and some abysmal failures," UK's Next Stage Series has set its sights even higher for next year.

The only contemporary performing arts program of its kind in Kentecky, the Next Stage series show-cases innovators in dance, musicand theater. Next year's line-up features nationally established artists who have no problem with name recognition.

"We have brought in artists who are popular but don't sacrifice artistic integrity for that popularity," said Next Stage Chairman By Hensley, the mastermind behind the Student Activities Board's innovative series.

The NBA's expansion commit-tee will meet Tuesday in New York to review the progress toward add-ing two teams for the 1995-96 sea-son, but no decision will be made, according to Brian McIntyre, the league's chief spokesman.

know Palestra is ready, but the de-cision is ultimately the NBA's," said Palestra president Joel Rose. He said he was "cautiously optimis-tic" that something very significant would come out of the meetings.

"Our expectation is to have a irm, conditional grant by June 30," aid Rose said Rose.

Labatt owns 90 percent of the World Series champion Blue Jays, which have drawn over four million customers in each of the past two years. The CIBC owns 10 percent of the American League franshies.

Toronto is not a difficult sell as a sports town. The Blue Jays sold out their 50,000-seat stadium for all but 13 games last year en route to a second consecutive major league attendance record.

Tickets to see the Maple Leafs of the NHL are at a premium even though the team has not won a Stanley Cup since 1967 and, until this year, went several seasons without a competitive team.

The Palestra backers said they have received unsolicited requests for more than 4,000 season tickets from basketball fans in southern Ontario and western New York.

Folk artist Richie Havens mesmerizes crowd with wild strumming, storytelling

By Phil Todd

Renowned singer-songwriter Ri-chie Havens brought his inimitable folk guitar style, his acidic social criticism and his overwhelmingly positive persona to the Kentucky Theatre Wednesday evening — and was greeted with a standing ovation from the capacity crowd gathered to see him.

Havens appeared in the second installment of the Coffeehouse Concert Series, a series designed to return popular music to the kind of intimate, small-hall atmosphere where it originally was performed.

If Wednesday's concert was any indication, this long-overdue series is sure to be a success.

The warm acoustics of the Kentucky are ideal for this type of music — a far cry from the gigantic tin can of Rupp Arena — and the proximity of the stage recalled the Greenwich Village coffeehouses the early 1960s, where Havens began his musical career.

And, unlike most similar concerts, the sound system was nearly perfect. If anything, the volume level was a bit too low. The sound was clear and seemed to come from the stage itself, and not the speakers—and it did, when Havens strayed from the microphone several times and just let his deep, resonant, unplugged voice fill the hall.

Havens, 52, cut his teeth on early rock 'n' roll while growing up in Brooklyn, N.Y. In 1961, Havens moved to Greenwich Village just in time to join in the emerging folk music scene. His 1967 album "Mixed Bag" was the first of his three gold recordings, and his version of "Here Comes The Sun" reached the pop Top 20 in 1971.

But Havens is best known for his show-stopping performance that opened the Woodstock festival in 1969.

"I was the fourth act scheduled to play," Havens said, "but I was the first person they flew out there. Guys were still hammering on the stage, but I went up and started to play."

During the first half of the concert, Havens performed alone, with nothing but his guitar. And he didn't need anything else. His unique, trademark guitar style—insistent, percussive and ferociously fast strumming on an instrument tuned to open E for depth—and his deep, barely-gravelled voice provided more than enough sound to communicate his message.

LETTERS POLICY

Readers are encouraged to submit letters to the editor and guest opinions to the Viewpoint page in person or by mail. Writers should address their comments to "Letters to the Editor"; Kentucky Kernel Editorial Editor, 325 Enoch. J. Grehan Journalism Building: UK; Lexington, Ky, 40506-0042. Letters should be 250 words or less, while guest opinions should be between 250 and 800 words. Writers must include their names and major classifications (for publication), as well as their addresses and telephone numbers for verification.Frequent contributors may be limited so that we may publish a wide range of opinions. We reserve the right to edit all material. Letters not published at the end of the semester may be printed at a later date.

What's in a list?

University should adopt policy for all students

The Student Government Association recently took a laudable stand against discrimination on campus by passing a resolution asking for sexual preference to be included in UK's non-discriminatory policy. To see such an effort by so many noteworthy individuals to advance the cause of tolerance made me proud to attend UK. However, after reviewing some of the implications of the resolution, I have begun to wonder whether the effort was misdirected. I am a firm believer in equal rights for all, and I strongly feel that no one should be discriminated against for any reason, save the content of their character.

Sexual preference is a personal decision of trait depending on the content of the character.

ed against for any reason, save the content of their character. Sexual preference is a personal decision, or trait, depending on what you believe, and it is not an adequate characteristic on which to judge someone's character. However, I do not feel that naming it as a "prefic" great description of it as a "specific" area deserving of protection is the correct route to once again dividing us into groups based on our race, sex, religion, age, sexual preference, etc., we should start trying to break down these surface distinctions and start protecting everyone equally.

protecting everyone equally.

As it stands now, we constantly are adding groups we feel need to be given special, or symbolic, protection. I do not argue that many at these groups have suffered an under proportion of discrimination, but this does not mean that they are the only people who are discriminated against.

Therefore, instead of telling peo-ple what we don't discriminate against, let's tell them what we do feel are appropriate areas for dis-

For example, when I am applying to UK, instead of telling me what you won't discriminate against me for, tell me that you will and I strongly feel that no one should be discriminated against for any reason, save the content of their character.

I am a firm believer in equal rights for all, discriminate against me on the ba-sis of my grades and ACT scores, and that anything beyond that should be considered unfair dis-crimination.

That way if I feel I have been discriminated against unjustly, I can fight the decision on firm ground no matter what my race, age, religion or sexual preference. This way everyone is on an equal playing field, and we all know the rules of the game.

This would, of course, require ne administration to set criteria of the administration to set criteria of discrimination for the entire Uni-versity, but it would help break down surface barriers between peo-ple and help create campus unity. Such an effort would be revolu-tionary, but revolutionary action is what brought us the ideal upon which our country is based, that being equal rights for all.

Therefore, let's not try to pro-tect our fellow students in a piece-neal effort, but instead take the lead and protect everyone with firm conviction that discrimina-tion for any reason other than that the content of one's character is wrone.

History shows minorities need protection

In a world buttressed by justice and equality for all, a universal non-discriminatory code would be delightful.

When our world settles into such an exquisitely idyllic mold, some-body please let me know. The Student Government Association's resolution to include sexual orientation on the long list of bases upon which the University says it will not discriminate struck a still-reverberating chord with many members of the campus. Good.

Good.
A little heat under the collar never killed anyone.

This bold move by SGA should be commended, for sexuality, like abortion, is one of those battle-grounds that many people dare not

Some, troubled that the issue has been raised at all, have argued that gays, lesbians and bisexuals al-ready are covered by UK's policy on individual rights — that adding another group to the list would mean very little.

And here is where they may be missing the point. Prejudice, bigor-ry and discrimination are not uni-versal concepts. Group-specific, these manifestations of cultural gi-norance are highly centralized in most cases. Someone who has it in for blacks may have the utmost re-spect for Jews, for example.

Therefore, a policy that sprays a thin, translucent coat of recogni-tion over the entire surface of our campus landscape is apt to miss tion over the entire surface of our campus landscape is apt to miss the closets and crevices that gays, lesbians and bisexuals have been bullied into.

A culture-definitive code, given room to expand along with the needs of those subjected to it, will do this University a tremendous amount of good.

If SGA is serious about getting the Board of Trustees to revise its code, it will propose more comprehensive and effectual modes of awareness-raising to supplement

If nothing else, it will send a strong message to prospective members of the campus community that UK wants to be seen as a progressive institution, sensitive to the diversified social makeup of this campus.

As a progressive university, UK then should champion its words with programs that candidly address when discrimination issues inherent in its non-discriminatory code. That means courses, fectures, forums and fire-side chats with President Wethington if need be.

The common result of bold measures is benign follow-up — good-natured, but a little patronizing.

Adding sexual orientation to the non-discriminatory code would be a positive maneuver, but it is one factor in an incredibly complex process. What gives the addition limited value is the fact that words often go unappreciated and, indeed, ignored.

If SGA is servious about getting

Cleveland not really bad city

I would like to point out to John Abbout the obtuseness of his statement: "Oh, yeah, like Cleveland's got a lot else to be proud of."

Cleveland does have a lot of which to be proud. Just to start: a world class orchestra, a world class art museum (which still offers free admission), a park system of 19,000 acres of mostly natural areas, a marvelous public library and a mass transit system that continues to operate on nights and on weekends. If dlike Abbout to compare those with what Lexington has to offer in the same categories.

Actually, I'd just as soon Abbott and other Cleveland bashers didn't discover what Cleveland has to offer. It leaves greater availability to those of us who do know.

Columnist misses mark about play

I would like to respond to Tenisha Johnson's recent column admonishing the UK theatre department's production of "Cloud Nine."

As the stage manager for the production, I find it repugnant that Johnson would use "Cloud Nine" as a soapbox for preaching reverse racism.

As an Asian American myself, I can understand the feelings of inequity in American society, but as an artist I find it very distasterful when Johnson asks us to believe that this play is an example of the Anglo-Saxon race's inferiority to anybody. I was taught by my parents that all people are the same and that if I thought Asians were better people than whites, blacks or any other group, I was a racist.

As for "Cloud Nine" itself, I believe that Johnson had better pay a little more attention in her TA 101 class. The author of this play, Caryl Churchill, was not making a racial, so much as a sexual, statement. The cross-racial casting of Joshua the servant was an attempt to show servant was an attempt to show how jaded colonial England atti-tudes were and, at best, was secon-dary to the cross-gender casting of almost all of the other characters in the play. This play is not about racism, it is about sexual ambiguity and, to a certain extent, homophobia. If Johnson would like to take a political stand against the state of necial equality in America, she should run for office. If she wants to take a stand against sexual "deviants," as she might call them, she should write a letter to Jesse Helms.

If she wants to critique the theatre

I am a minority, too, John I get angry sometimes as well — but you had better find another scapegoat for venting your hatred of white America. Leave my art alone.

Whether a reader is looking for "Whether a reader is looking for inspiring role models or new re-search, this interview collection is an entertaining look at changes in journalism," wrote Gloria Steinem in an advance review of the book. The book includes interviews with famous syndicated columnists such as Erma Bombeck, Judith "Miss Manners" Martin and Anna Outsidlen.

Quindlen.

The interviews with the women tell how they get ideas for their colunnerman and how they overcame discrimination as women columnists. She also wrote her opinions about the women and, at the end of the women and, at the end of each interview segment of the book, Braden included a couple of examples of each woman's work.

The women she included all were nationally syndicated columnists, with the exceptions of Dorothy Gil-liam of the Washington Post and Merlene Davis of the Lexington Herald-Leader.

Herald-Leader.

She included these two women because there were no black syndicated columnists at the time she was researching and interviewing for her book. Braden said she wanttor let pook. Braden said she want-ded a broad representation of women in her book. She included a finan-cial writer, a health writer and a few political writers. Braden said her biggest challenge in writing the book was capturing the women's personalities in the small space she had.

small space she had.
"They're all challenging in a way. When you try to write a little sketch about somebody's personality, you always wonder if you do them justice," she said.

Associate professor Maria Braden's new book, 'She Said What?,' will be available in bookstores in May. Braden interviewed several women columnists, including Miss Manners, for the book.

Braden had to be on her "best behavior" when interviewing Judith Martin, she said.

"We sat in a very elegant ladies' club in New York. She never bent her back the whole time."

The interview began in what Bra-den called an "uncomfortable tone." She said she had been waiting for Martin for 20 minutes in the club before she called Martin's agent. The agent told Braden that Martin was there. Each woman was wait-ing in a separate room.

ing in a separate room.
"I went running from the phone, and there was Miss Manners putting on a full length white mink coat, ready to storm out the door, and we both got madder and mader that both of us was standing the other up." Braden said.

"She's genuinely funny... She's bold... She drove me around Austin in her pick-up truck with the dice hanging from the window," Braden said. "She's such an individual."

vidual."

Braden found that readers tend to think they know the columnist's personal life. One reader wrote Quindlen, saying she knew she had an abortion because of how Quindlen writes about the subject.

"Readers want you to be who they have in mind," Quindlen told Braden.

"All of those readers think they know what all of these people's private lives are like, and they really don't. In some cases they get a peek into them," Braden said.

Ellen Goodman, an associate editor of the Boston Globe, likes to keep her private life private, Braden said.

"(She) was the most reluctant to talk about herself," Braden said. "When you have a public persona as any of these columnists do, they want to keep some part of their life private. She's very jealous of that privacy."

Braden said she enjoys writing and that there is an added bonus to working in news. "You are actually performing a public service. You are getting information out which is necessary to the functioning of the democracy.

"There is a lot of satisfaction in that."

Braden also worked for the Associated Press in Kentucky from 1971 to 1980.

Derickson said police do not yet know who owns the hand gun used in the shooting, but Curry said it did not belong to Presley. Students are not allowed to possess firearms of any type while on campus.

No foul play is suspected in the incident, and UK police are treating it as an "accidental shooting," Derickson said, but there are several unanswered questions.

Perhaps the most important ques-tion, however, is why Presley and Smith were playing Russian roution, however, is why Presley and Smith were playing Russian rou-lette in the first place. The two men who can best answer that question, Smith and Mitchell, were unavaila-ble for comment yesterday. Smith could not be located, and a man who answered the telephone in Mitchell's room said Mitchell "ain't takin' no phone calls."

As of yesterday afternoon, De-rickson said UK police had not filed any charges in connection with the case. The incident has been referred to the Dean of Students 'Office, but Derickson said it "is too early to tell if any disciplinary action will be taken."

Presley is an electrical engineer-ing senior and one of only 24 Wild-cat football team members to attain at least a 3.0 grade-point average during the 1992 spring semester.

The 5-foot-8, 170-pound senior is in his third year of eligibility as a walk-on at UK. He played high school ball at Christian County.
