Chinese Student Exchange

Fourteen UK students touring China as part of an exchange program with a Chinese university found themselves in the middle of one of the biggest moral stands for freedom in that country's history. The protests did not turn violent in China until the day after the UK students had come home. Since then thousands of Chinese students have died as a result of clashes with the army or been arrested.

It was a frightening experience for parents trying to contact their touring students. In many cases it was six days before they could get through. Adrian and Theresa Cannon of Hopkinsville felt like no news was good news when they did not hear from Amanda. In fact, when Amanda did call she was not aware of the protest until her parents told her what was happening. She says that she "was a little scared. . . we were in a communist country — we weren't informed enough to be frightened."

Brothers Tim and Adam Smith of Brooksville were also on the trip. "Our guide kept everything secret," says Adam Smith. "The itinerary changed daily. They said it was because of the weather, but we think it was because of the protests." Their parents, Roger and Gloria Smith, did not know of their children's safety for over a week.

Roger Hemken, an animal scientist with the UK College of Agriculture, headed the tour. He says, "I don't believe our guide really wanted us to know too much, but we were able to talk with others, including students. We felt fairly well informed."

The trip began May 1 and ended June 8. It was the seventh year the Shandong Agricultural University has been host to the UK Ag students.

Chinese students at UK are active in staging demonstrations and gathering monetary contributions to support their fellow students in China. Fang C. Wu, a plant pathologist with the College of Agriculture, was among those leading a protest of about 100 people in Lexington's Triangle Park in June. "Through the media, we will send a message back to China," says Wu. He thinks it important that "the people outside China support them, encourage them completely to stand and fight to the end."

A graduate student at UK from Shanghai, China, Wei Min Liu, feels concern over a possible civil war. Hemkem said that fear is growing in the U.S.

"I have a Chinese student and he's greatly concerned there will be a civil war. He's not worried about the immediate danger. He said he's more concerned with what will happen two months to six months from now. If it turns into a civil war, the whole country could be devastated."

Chinese students in Lexington demonstrated to show their support for fellow students back home.

Appalachian Collection

The Appalachian Regional Commission (ARC), a federal-state agency devoted to the economic and social development of the 13-state region, moved its library and archives to the University of Kentucky, where it is expected to be a major resource for researchers.

Consisting of transcripts of ARC meetings, state development plans, final project reports, correspondence, ARC research reports and legislation, oral histories, literature about the region, and other material on the region, the collection provides a detailed look at the ARC and its role in Appalachian regional development.

The addition of the ARC collection "strengthens our position as one of the best Appalachian research collections in the country," said UK director of libraries Paul Willis.

UK's commitment to the Appalachian region, and its ability to provide an appropriate home for the collection, led to its selection from among the three universities which submitted proposals to the ARC for housing the collection.

The extensive ARC library and archival holdings complement UK's already strong Appalachian Collection, which includes such important collections as the Frontier Nursing Service records, the Wheelwright Collection, and the papers of author and historian Harry M. Caudill.

The library also houses the papers of several prominent Kentucky political leaders, including John Sherman Cooper, A.B. Chandler, Lawrence Wetherby and Earle Clements. Former ARC Federal co-chairman Al Smith also has agreed to place his political papers in the library.

UK has incorporated Appalachian studies into its curriculum, and in 1977 established the Appalachian Center to conduct research and organize seminars.

The commission decided last year to move its library and archives from Washington, DC, to an appropriate site where it could be professionally managed and where it would be more accessible to scholars and the general public.

Unique DUI Program

College-age, drunken drivers can attend a different kind of class now at UK. They'll learn about the problems of drinking and driving for their $50 class fee and they'll qualify to cut the suspension of their driver's license from six to 30 days.

"This program leads the way in the state for alcohol driver education. We're the only university in the state with this kind of program," said Todd Warnick, UK's chemical dependency counselor and one of the founders of the program.

The program also is one of the few in the nation aimed at college-age drunken drivers, he said. The program is open to any first-time offender, although it is aimed at drivers from 18-to-25 years old.

The first classes will begin this fall, says Warnick. At least one class will be held each month. Warnick expects up to 200 persons to enter the program each semester.

The two-year program was funded by a $90,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education. The grant came after a campus survey showed a need for a drug and alcohol-awareness program, said Mike Nichols, director of the University's counseling center.

In addition to DUI offenders, the program also will involve some disciplinary referrals from the residences halls or from the Dean of Students Office. Often such discipline problems are related to alcohol abuse, he noted.

The program "gives me an opportunity to help them become aware of their drinking problem," said Warnick, "and then hook them into a treatment program."

SEC Academic Honor Roll

Forty-two University of Kentucky student-athletes have been named to the 1989 SEC Academic Honor Roll for spring sports, giving UK the most honorees of any conference school, the SEC office has announced. Auburn University had the second-highest total with 41.

Earlier this year, 11 UK student-athletes had been named to the Honor Roll in football and three in women's volleyball, pushing UK's total for the year to 56.

"We are proud of the accomplishments of our teams and student-athletes this year, particularly in the classroom," said Wildcat Athletics Director C.M. Newton. "This is the second significant announcement this spring about our academic success."

The football team received the College Football Association's highest academic award for graduating the most players from their 1983 recruiting class. Only Notre Dame, the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill and the University of Virginia had won the award since its inception ?? years ago.

To be eligible for the SEC Academic Honor Roll, student-athletes must have at least a 3.00 grade point average (either cumulative or during the immediate past school year), must have been enrolled at their institution for at least one academic year, must have earned 24 semester or 36 quarter hours countable toward a degree, and must have earned a letter during the current season.

Here is a list of UK's spring honorees by sport:

BASEBALL: Mark Blythe, Jim Dill, Roger Gum, John Hampton, Joe Welch, Billy White, Bruce Wise;

GOLF: Ted Beckmann, Brett Bronski, Steve Flesch, Alan Horwitz, Ann Kroot, Greg Lehmann, Tim Leroy, Mark McIntire;

GYMNASTICS: Heather Kirk, Donna Oeffinger, Diane Sill;

SWIMMING and DIVING: Kenneth Atkinson, Sandra Bohorquez, Bonnie Franklin, Virginia McNeill, Bartley Pratt, Jeremy Salmon, Peggy Sheets, Brian VanHorn;

TENNIS: Rich Benson, Caroline Knudten, Ian Skidmore, Sammy Stinnett;

TRACK and FIELD: Lisa Breiding, David Brockwell, Joe Butler, Robin Grim, Sherry Hoover, Brian Maslyar, Valerie McGovern, Chandra Naidu, Kristy Orre, Patricia Padorno-Betancor, Lynne Segreti, Bob Whelan.

Tom Gaither, left, a Kentucky artist from Ludlow, and Jay Brumfield, executive director of UK's National Alumni Association, watch as UK President David Roselle signs a copy of Gaither's collage of buildings and landmarks on the Lexington campus. The centennial print, commissioned in honor of the 100th anniversary of the National Alumni Association, sell for $40.

SUCCESS

BY KAY JOHNSON

Success is measured in as many different ways as there are people measuring it. Each of the 13 new inductees into the Hall of Distinguished Alumni has a very personal, yet shared view of what success means. Whatever the definition, successful is what they are.

"SOMEBODY WHO CARES. THAT'S ALL IT AMOUNTS TO REALLY - ONE WHO CARES." EVELYN FREYMAN ❧ "...GOES ON DOING WHAT HE BECAME SUCCESSFUL AT JUST BECAUSE IT'S A GOOD THING TO BE DOING ANYWAY." BOBBIE ANN MASON ❧ "...TO LIVE FREE OF THE TECHNOLOGICAL SYSTEM, MILITARY OR INDUSTRIAL... THAT IS DESTROYING THE WORLD." WENDELL BERRY ❧ "...SOMEONE WHO HAD DEVELOPED A CADRE OF FRIENDS AND ASSOCIATES. SOMEONE WHO LEAVES A TANGIBLE ITEM USEFUL TO CLIENTELE FOR THE FUTURE AND RECOGNIZED BY ONE'S PEERS WITHIN THE PROFESSION..." SHIRLEY PHILLIPS ❧ "FOR LONG-TERM HAPPINESS THE MOST IMPORTANT THING TO THINK ABOUT IS ESTABLISHING A GOOD SET OF PRINCIPLES AND ETHICS TO LIVE BY." WILLIAM KIRWAN ❧ "...I WOULD NOT FEEL SUCCESSFUL IF MY RELATIONSHIP WITH MY HUSBAND AND CHILDREN WAS NOT HAPPY AND THRIVING." JUDITH CLABES ❧ "...UTILIZING HIS OR HER ABILITIES TO THE FULLEST, ACTING INTELLIGENTLY, HONESTLY AND WITH HUMOR, MAKING A CONTRIBUTION TO THE REST OF SOCIETY." ANDREAS PRINDL ❧ "...AUTHENTIC SUCCESS DOES NOT COME EASILY AS A GIFT OR AN INHERITANCE. IT IS EARNED THROUGH HARD WORK AND DILIGENCE." DORIS WILKINSON ❧ "AN INDIVIDUAL WHO HAS LEARNED THE MESSAGE OF LOVE AND HOW TO LOVE HIS FELLOW MAN." WILLIAM MARKESBERY ❧ "SUCCESS IS AN INNER CONCEPT AND AN ATTITUDE A PERSON CULTIVATES INSIDE OF HIM... IT IS NOT PREDICATED ON WINNING AND ON MAKING A LOT OF MONEY... SUCCESS IS WHEN ONE REALLY FEELS GOOD ABOUT WHAT HE DOES AND CARRIES THAT ATTITUDE WITH HIM TO WHATEVER HE DOES." PAT RILEY ❧

Wendell Berry

Judith Clabes

Lucille Couch

To be selected for this honor, the nominee must be a graduate of the University and have achieved national or international prominence in their field of endeavor, a prominence that reflects favorably on the Commonwealth and the University.

This year's induction of five women and eight men includes three writers, a newspaper editor, an international banker, an ambassador, a basketball coach, a university president, a music educator, a physician-researcher, a labor organizer, an agronomist, and a sociologist.

They are: Wendell Berry, author, professor, farmer and ecologist; Judith Clabes, editor of the Kentucky Post, and a syndicated columnist; the late Lucille Couch, a nationally known educator in the field of music; Evelyn Gall Freyman, actress, theater owner, and labor organizer; William Kirwan, president of the University of Maryland at College Park; William Markesbery, Alzheimer's researcher and head of the Sanders-Brown Center on Aging; Bobbie Ann Mason, author of three highly acclaimed novels, including In Country; Thomas M. Niles, U.S. Ambassador to Canada and soon-to-be U.S. Ambassador to the European Common Market; Shirley Phillips, retired professor of agronomy, credited with pioneering no-till agriculture; Andreas Prindl, an international banker and managing director of Nomura International, Ltd.; Pat Riley, head coach of the Los Angeles Lakers basketball team; the late Walter Tevis, an author whose works include The Hustler and The Color of Money, and Doris Wilkinson, professor of sociology and a nationally known sociologist.

W. Somerset Maugham once said: "The common idea that success spoils people by making them vain, egotistic, and self-complacent is erroneous — on the contrary it makes them, for the most part humble, tolerant and kind. Failure makes people bitter and cruel."

Here's what each new Hall member has to say about his/her own personal definition of success, all different, yet with a common theme in their definitions. These are "people" people — they care about others. Evelyn Freyman simply says that the definition of a successful person is "somebody who cares. That's all it amounts to really — one who cares."

Freyman demonstrated her dedication to justice and fair play when she became one of the most successful labor negotiators the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists (AFTRA) has seen. She earned a reputation for ability to win rich contracts for members and was elected national vice president of AFTRA seven times. Her advice to anyone beginning a career: "Believe in what you do, love what you do, and be honest with yourself — if you are not honest with yourself it is to no avail."

Bobbie Ann Mason defines a successful person as one who has overcome the idea of success, who isn't impressed with himself for his own achievements, "and who goes on doing what he became successful at just because it's a good thing to be doing anyway."

Her best known work, a novel called In Country, which received critical acclaim, is scheduled for release this winter as a movie. About the book Mason says, "I didn't set out to write a novel about Vietnam because I thought one was needed. It was a subject that sort of sneaked up on me, one that I couldn't avoid."

Wendell Berry's thoughts about success are changing. At one time he felt success would be "to live where I do now, to be respected by some of the people who know me, including, I hope, my grandchildren, and to be more or less self-employed at work from which I will not retire." However, "our time is forcing upon us a more demanding definition of success: to live free of the technological system, military or industrial — the difference is negligible — that is destroying the world." His recommendation is to "distrust wealth, distrust power, distrust fashions, distrust officials and experts, distrust technological optimism."

Berry is a poet with a deep and abiding interest in agriculture. He grows food for his family plowing the land with a team of horses and an old-fashioned plow.

Sharing Berry's love of the land is Shirley Phillips, who says a successful person "is someone who has developed a cadre of friends and associates. Someone who leaves a tangible item useful to clientele for the future and is recognized by one's peers within the profession. . ." He has achieved that by devoting

William Markesbery

Bobbie Ann Mason

Thomas M. Niles

his talents to the improvement of agriculture. Among Phillip's major contributions was the development of a no-tillage system to maintain and improve crop production on sloping soils, the development of double cropping systems with soybeans following barley and wheat to provide two crops in one year for Kentucky farmers, and the campaign to increase corn, soybean and wheat production so that Kentucky could be competitive with the corn belt. Due to his efforts, the no-till system is being used world wide. Phillips says it is important to "be straight-forward" and to "establish tolerance for other people and their ideas and opinions, . . . and don't take one's self too seriously."

Thomas Niles and William Kirwan share the idea that a successful person is one who finds whatever he or she is doing personally fulfilling. Agreeing with that, Judith Clabes says, "Work at something you like; work is too much a part of our lives to do it just for money or status."

Niles is the first and only native Kentuckian to work his way up the diplomatic career ladder to the rank of ambassador, becoming American ambassador to Canada in 1985. He may be one of the few people ever professionally rewarded because he told the White House something it didn't want to hear. During former President Ronald Reagan's trip to Bonn in 1985, plans were made for him to lay a wreath at the West German military cemetery at Bittburg. Niles warned that the U.S. was not getting accurate information about the German war dead buried there — and that laying the wreath could cause embarrassment. Although the White House ignored it, his assessment proved to be correct. His reputation skyrocketed in the eyes of senior White House authorities, leading directly to his assignment as ambassador to Canada. Soon he will have the important mission of the U.S.'s first ambassador to the European Common Market.

Kirwan, who is president of the University of Maryland's College Park campus, says "For long-term happiness the most important thing to think about is establishing a good set of principles and ethics to live by." Grateful for his father's inspiration, "both by example as a human being in his values and principles and commitment to higher education and to things I hold near and dear, and by the support and nurturing he gave me when I was young. I must include my mother who was his full partner in everything he did."

Kirwan has had more than 25 years of experience at College Park, joining the faculty as an assistant mathematics professor in 1964, becoming chairman of the math department in 1977, and vice chancellor for academic affairs in 1981. With his induction into the Hall, Kirwan and his father become the only father and son team in the Hall of Distinguished Alumni.

Named editor of the Kentucky Post in 1983, Clabes confirms that being the first woman editor of a major Kentucky paper was not easy. "It's tough being first," she says. "People are looking at you to set the pace for every other woman. You're the trailblazer for everybody, not just yourself."

"For me," says Clabes, "success is defined in extremely personal terms: I would not feel successful if my relationship with my husband and children was not happy and thriving." She says that no one succeeds alone and warns against neglecting or sacrificing personal relationships; "A pension does not keep your feet warm in old age."

Andreas Prindl, who says "hard work distinguishes the best from the merely good," defines a successful person as one who is "utilizing his or her abilities to the fullest, acting intelligently, honestly and with humor, making a contribution to the rest of society."

Doris Wilkinson believes that one must expect to succeed and that "authentic success does not come easily as a gift or an inheritance. It is earned through hard work and diligence."

Prindl began his banking career in 1964 when he went to work for Morgan Guaranty, which was to be the only company he worked for until 1984 when he joined Nomura as managing director. Nomura, a Japanese firm, is the world's largest international investment finance house.

He believes ethical behavior to be the basis of all human interaction, and that "it hardly need be discussed — ethics should be embedded, and followed without further consideration."

Wilkinson is the 1989 winner of the National DuBois-Johnson-Frazier Award for her exemplary contributions to minority research and the field of race relations.

A professor of sociology at UK, Wilkinson

William Kirwan

Evelyn Gall Freyman

says she "... wanted to do (nothing) else but be a teacher... blessed to have the chance to teach." Known for the enthusiasm and affection she feels for her students, she says, "I don't see how you couldn't care about people who want to learn."

For Wilkinson, "attaining one's goals without undermining or hurting others is fundamental to my philosophy — having integrity is of the first order."

William Markesbery is a quiet and unassuming man whose expertise in Alzheimer's disease research has brought him to national prominence. One of the results of his dedication is the millions of dollars brought into the Sanders-Brown Center on Aging for research. He explains that at the Center, "We're trying to understand the elderly and their problems and be a spokesman for them. With not only their medical problems, but with social problems, too."

Among his ideas of what a successful person is Markesbery includes "An individual who has learned the message of love and how to love his fellow man." And, among his words of advice to someone choosing a career, "Find an area that is exciting and challenging that allows you to serve your fellow man." He also believes in setting goals "beyond your reach and ability, and always reach for the stars. Work hard — be diligent and unrelenting in striving for excellence."

Pat Riley says that people must develop a belief system, act on it and enjoy it. "We all know the difference between right and wrong... with your belief system in place you will conduct your life in a way never to allow it to be compromised. Then it doesn't matter what happens; it's that you deal with it in the proper vein that counts.

"Success is an inner concept and an attitude a person cultivates inside of him... it is not predicated on winning and on making a lot of money. Success and winning are two different things. Success is when one really feels good about what he does and carries that attitude with him to whatever he does."

His father, says Riley, taught him a lot about discipline; "how to stand firm and make a statement for myself. We are all products of our education — we all have people to help us teach those things needed to develop success."

Andreas Prindl

Posthumous awards honoring Lucille Couch and Walter Tevis will be presented to family members. Couch joins her brother, Virgil, in the Hall of Distinguished Alumni making them the first brother and sister so honored, the only two children of parents who never attended high school.

The Kentucky Music Educators Association wrote this commendation as a part of its tribute to Lucille Couch in 1980: "Kentucky has been blessed with many dedicated sons and daughters who have given unselfishly of their time to bring our state to her present stature. The musical life of our state has been greatly enriched by the faithful years of service of Lucille E. Couch."

Walter Tevis drew on personal experience for his novels. His widow once said that when he was writing The Hustler he was basically writing about himself.

"Essentially, he was writing about himself as a writer writing his first novel and of the fear of it," she said. "But like Fast Eddie, he knew that he had to play the game, had to write. He knew that you had to do the thing that you are afraid of doing. Eventually, he gave up his life as a professor in order to write because he couldn't write and teach at the same time. He knew he had to cut his ties and take the risk.

"He was a very courageous man who didn't realize how courageous he was."

And there you have it, 13 more reasons to take pride in your University, a University that helped shape the lives of these people, people with diverse careers yet sharing the ideals that some fear have been lost in today's society.

It is in keeping with the celebration of the National Alumni Association's Centennial year that the Hall of Distinguished Alumni presentations have been moved up one year. Selections have been made every five years since the Hall was first established in 1965 to help celebrate the University's Centennial. Including this year's class, there are now 203 people in the Hall of Distinguished Alumni.

Tickets at $22.50 each are available for the Oct. 13 banquet. Make reservations with the UK National Alumni Association, King Alumni House, Lexington, KY 40506-0119, (606) 257-8905. Kay Johnson '86 is assistant editor of Alumni Publications.

The long and stormy NCAA investigation of the University of Kentucky basketball program has come to an end. Now the University is moving forward with the new leadership of alumnus C.M. Newton as director of athletics, and Rick Pitino as head coach of the Wildcats.

Newton comes back to the University highly touted for his integrity as a person as much as for his success as a coach. One of his major goals at Kentucky is to see that the UK program becomes a model for collegiate sports administration. UK President David Roselle started down that path with an unprecedented process of cooperation during the investigation. It's a path that Newton is eager to follow and a major reason why he gave up a comfortable and successful coaching job at Vanderbilt to return to Lexington.

During his 32-year career that took him to three universities . . . Transylvania in Lexington, Alabama and Vanderbilt, Newton won 509 games, lost 375. Perhaps more impressive, however, was Newton's ability to produce winning teams with exceptional academic credentials. During his eight years at Vanderbilt, 18 Commodores were named to the academic all-SEC team, over 50 percent more than any other school in the league. All 21 of the seniors he coached there earned a degree.

Part of Newton's reputation stems from his national and international contributions to basketball. He has literally circled the globe to promote the game of basketball. His wedding band shares his ring finger with his 1984 Olympic championship ring. For six years he worked on the NCAA Basketball Rules Committee, serving as chairman of that elite group for five of those years. He was also vice president of ABAUSA, the nation's governing body for international amateur basketball.

Rick Pitino was the first new person Newton hired. Pitino's name was always

After The Storm

BY LIZ DEMORAN

on the media list of head coaching contenders, but Rick himself was focused on the NBA play-offs where his New York Knicks team kept winning and winning. When the Knicks' season finally ended, it didn't take long for UK's recruiting process to begin.

Pitino had the key ingredients the UK administrators were looking for: he was considered one of the best young coaches in America (133-73 in seven years at the college level and 90-74 in two years in the pros), he had a reputation for demanding as much from his players in the classroom as he did from them on the court, he played an exciting, fast-paced style of ball, and he wanted the challenge of being the Wildcats head coach at this time in history.

Pitino started coaching as a graduate assistant at Hawaii; then was an assistant at Syracuse University under Jim Boheim for two years. In 1978, at the age of 25, he became head coach at Boston University where in five years he entered the record books as the winningest coach in BU history. He jumped to the pro game as assistant coach of the New York Knicks in 1983. After two years, he went back to the collegiate setting as coach at Providence College where he turned that program around. While at Providence he took a team that had been 11-20 the previous year to the National Invitational Tournament his first year and to the NCAA Final Four the second year, was named John Wooden National Coach of the Year and the Sporting News Coach of the Year.

On that note he returned to the Knicks as head coach in 1987 and guided them to the play-offs his first year there and this past season to the Atlantic Coast division title and into the sixth game of the final play-offs. Now he's at Kentucky preparing to demonstrate his own brand of brash confidence rooted in a consuming work ethic that results in winning the right way.

James E. Luckett '32, a member of Kentucky State University Board of Regents, was assigned to chair the search committee to fill the position of president of the University. Luckett, a life member of the UK National Alumni Association, and a UK Fellow, spent most of his career in government service. He was appointed Kentucky Commissioner of Revenue by five governors, served as a member of the American financial mission to Iran, 1944-1946, and served 1959-1963 as consultant to the Thailand Department of Revenue, Bangkok, Thailand.

John Lewis '32 has been named Citizen of the Year by the Parksville, B.C., Canada Chamber of Commerce. Music director and conductor of the Parksville and District Musical Association since 1971, Lewis is best known for the annual production of Handel's Messiah. The Welch-born, multi-talented Lewis plays, conducts and teaches. He is also interested in building, cooking, painting and carving.

Ivan G. Hosack '33 and his wife Mary, inveterate travelers since their marriage in 1970, have recorded their adventures in photographs and are combining two loves, traveling and teaching, into their retirement. They provide lectures and color slide presentations about the countries they have visited to various schools in Erie and Allegheny Counties, Pa.

Richard F. Greathouse '47 is a clinical professor of pediatrics at the University of Louisville School of Medicine.

C.E. Hutchinson '47, along with his wife Sarah Semones Hutchinson, were presented Distinguished Alumni Awards at the Campbellville College 30th commencement in May. Hutchinson has been in public education for 42 years.

A. Glenn Graff '48 is vice president - operations liaison with Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation in the Florida state office in Lakeland. Graff, who has been in the title insurance business since 1955, joined Lawyers Title in 1980 as manager of the Polk County branch office in Winter Haven.

Lawrence R. Nickell '48 retired this year after 37 years of medical practice. He has served in several leadership positions including chief of staff of Maury Regional Hospital, president of the Maury County Medical Society, vice president and delegate of the Tennessee Medical Association, president of the Tennessee Radiology Society and Medical Director of the CSCC School of Radiological Technology. To Market, To Market...

Sarah Belle used to work here," says Jessica Bollinger '80 rubbing the dog's brown head. "Here" is Jessica's Quality Fruits and Vegetables, a market on Nicholasville Road in Lexington. Sarah Belle, a boxer, used to entertain children while their parents shopped, but the health department frowns on such an arrangement and Sarah Belle lost her job. These days she stays home and helps on the farm.

Jessica's opened the end of June 1981 just six months after Bollinger graduated from UK armed with a B.S. degree in agricultural economics. While living in Lexington during her school years, she missed the fresh fruit and vegetable markets that her family patronized in Louisville, and decided she'd found a need she could fill.

After opening the business she had paid off the property in three years, "So I went home to Louisville the first few winters so I could eat," she says. "My parents always believed in me. My mother came up to work in the market in the summers." Her father is Jess C. Bollinger, Jr., '51 a builder/developer. For the first couple of months after she opened, Bollinger would leave Lexington at 3:30 a.m. with a live stock trailer and head for the terminal market in Louisville, "where the produce comes in from everywhere." She'd have to load the trailer by hand because it couldn't be backed up to the loading dock. Then she'd get back to Lexington around 9 a.m., "unload the truck, open with mom, and think about price changes..."

In August she bought "A great big truck. The first time I drove it it threw a rod coming back over the Kentucky bridge. I'd just paid for it — had to put a new engine in it."

After five years she was able to hire a driver. "I felt like I was on vacation. After working from 3:30 a.m. until 8 p.m. everyday I got a little slap-happy. The only way I kept going was adrenaline and a feeling of good purpose."

She has, she says, a wonderful crew. Two years ago she hired Tim Hawkins to help her manage the market. "Tim is someone who loves it as much I do. We share the same philosophy," Hawkins says, "I told her how much I believe in the customers. They are the people who take care of us so we want to take care of them." Hawkins, who puts in a 70 hour work week says, "Jessica comes in on Sundays. That's my day off."

Bollinger says Hawkins let her have this summer off "to get this thing going," referring to Carriage Station Farm on Old Frankfort Pike. She has lived on the farm for two and a half years with five horses, two cats, and two boxers, Sarah Belle and her son, Spuds. Her original plan for the farm was to board Thoroughbreds, which she says was a mistake. "But you never know until you try." Now her hopes for the farm are to make it a top-notch boarding operation for Hunters/Jumpers/Eventers, with instruction. She just finished constructing an all-weather arena "that won't freeze and drains well so that you can ride in the rain, too."

Her days still begin early, around 5 a.m., when she goes to the barn to bring in the horses. She brings them in during the day to protect them from sunburn. Kiz Potensky, an elementary school teacher, has been helping her on the farm. "She's been putting in 12 hour days with me this summer, helping with the horses and keeping everything mowed and beautiful around here." Potensky teases Bollinger by saying, "You get a different philosophy from Jessica every day. Today's is 'You always learn from others who learn from others.'" Bollinger laughs and says "That one's from my dad."

She wants her farm to be as successful as her market, which has earned an enviable reputation. She says the market cash margin is slim, and that a lot of places come and go, "But, I always try to do things right. I want to get to know my customers because I care about them. I try to remember that through the fruits and vegetables sold at Jessica's, I go to someone's dinner table every night. That's a pretty intimate place to be and I want them to have the best produce possible."

She says there are a lot of easier ways to make money. "I didn't think it would be such heavy work — those boxes are heavy."

The market is open April through October which should give Bollinger time to concentrate only on her farm. But, during November and December Hawkins helps her manage Swiss Colony franchises in kiosks in four malls, three in Lexington and one in Richmond.

"One thing about the farm and the fruit market is there's always something to do," says Bollinger. "And when you love what you do..."

After working from 3:30 a.m. until 8 p.m. everyday I got a little slap-happy. The only way I kept going was adrenaline and a feeling of good purpose."

C.M. Newton says...

Alumnus: How does the UK athletics program compare with others?

Newton: One of the most disturbing things to me is the lack of favorable attention given to all of the athletic program. The football program is competitive and close to being more. Couple that with the other achievements of the program and it's first rate. The cross-country men's and women's teams were national champions recently, and at the same time. That's impressive. Tennis and golf, and baseball (although it was a little down this past season) are good programs. So are the gymnastics, and volleyball programs. The natatorium should help the swimming program. It is disappointing that the recent disarray in basketball has overshadowed the personnel, other programs and facilities at our University.

Alumnus: How do you describe your management style?

Newton: I believe totally in a team concept as you would expect from my background in coaching. Just like in coaching, everyone has a contribution to make, but you don't have to achieve consensus in every matter. I imagine there will be some times when I'll just have to call time-out. A huddle is no place for a discussion; the coach is doing the talking then. Loyalty is important and then a good work ethic. You have to make things happen. We won't be outworked by any staff that's for sure.

Alumnus: What are your hopes as athletic director?

Newton: We've realigned the administrative structure and duties somewhat. John Bostick is assistant AD for compliance. I've told him to be creative. There aren't any pre-defined constraints on how to do his job. Bob Bradley who has done a fine job with the tutorial services is expanding his role to include more career counseling and job placement services. Larry Ivy continues to administer internal affairs while Gene DeFilippo handles external affairs. Kathy DeBoer's role is expanding to include all non-revenue sports, not just women's sports. In terms of facilities, we need another indoor practice facility for football, baseball and indoor track.

Alumnus: What about head basketball coach Rick Pitino?

Newton: I am so impressed with Rick Pitino. He is a very good disciplinarian. He'll have "class" in his program and people will recognize it. His style of ball will attract quality players. He's a coach and he's a teacher. He'll bring in talented student-athletes and teach them to get better and better.

Alumnus: How can alumni help?

Newton: There are three ways. One, continue to be interested in all of our sports programs. Come to the games, come and enjoy them. Come to campus; come to the open practices. Watch us on TV. Two, support the total university. President Roselle is a man of vision and integrity who can lead this university to greater accomplishment. Help him and help us by sending us the good student-athlete and the superior student of talent in any field, and give the university your financial assistance when you can. Three, help us recruit. Know and understand the rules. Follow those rules totally, 100 percent. Write the head coach of a sport concerning gifted athletes who can help us win. And, if you have proof of any recruiting violations anywhere by anyone, report them immediately to my office. . . . Memorial Coliseum University of Kentucky, Lexington KY 40506-0019.

Rick Pitino says...

Alumnus: Why leave New York and the Knicks to coach at UK?

Pitino: I'm a New Yorker, not a Lexingtonian; that's true. But people are people everywhere, and I think we'll get along fine. My wife and I cherished our lives with young people on a daily basis (at Providence College, not just on the basketball court. We missed the academic community, the lifestyle, and the family atmosphere and you have all of that here. And, I've never shied away from a challenge. Kentucky is down right now, but with C.M. Newton as athletic director and David Roselle as president, it's gonna be right back on top. The most important thing to me is not how to build Kentucky basketball. That will be done and it will be done a lot easier than people think. That doesn't mean it will be an easy task, but it can be done in a very short period of time.

Alumnus: What philosophy guides you?

Pitino: The key to life is to turn negatives into positives. If you wake up expecting a cloudy day, that's what you'll get. I think winning is an attitude. Build a winner in attitude first and that shows as much in the classroom as on the basketball court. That's something we'll concentrate on right away.

Alumnus: Is this the greatest challenge of your coaching career?

Pitino: Whether this is the greatest challenge remain to be seen. It is a big one. The sanctions and probation just make it a little bit tougher but we will overcome all obstacles in making Kentucky basketball rich once again. We will win and we will win right away. Whether that means in terms of the wins and losses that show up in the columns, I'm not sure. I think that Kentucky people and Kentucky supporters everywhere will leave the arena forgetting the score and saying "that basketball team is a winner" and that will be the foundation for what's to come.

Alumnus: What do you expect from your basketball players?

Pitino: When they're on the court I expect them to give more than they think they have to give. Off the court, they should be a contributing member of their community and that's the university. Students should live with other students. They should overachieve as much scholastically as they do athletically.

Postscript from Kenny Walker '85, currently with the Knicks, who was present during part of this interview: "It's just a really exciting brand of basketball. I wish I could come back here and play for him. He's a motivator. Every player believes he can do something to win. He'll use a lot of people, probably ten or 12 guys every game. He's just a straightforward guy. You're never tight around him. Heck, he gave me the green light to shoot three-pointers! He definitely can make you better."

Alumnus: Describe Pitino ball?

Pitino: It's a pressing, running style that feeds on talent and adjusts to talent. I think what this style does is bring out the positives and makes basketball an up-tempo game. It camouflages weaknesses. I've always felt if you say "we're too slow" or "we're too small" and sit back in a two-three zone and lose by six or eight points and then say "I did a great job of out-coaching that guy because we only lost by eight points" that that is negative ball. We're in this to win and win right away. We will either give you wins or give you losses by a great margin, but we're going after winning right away. We're not going after coming close.

Mary Ann Mason and Betty Perry, EFNEP assistant and Mary Ann's son, Paul discuss nutrition tips

May 8, 1914 President Woodrow Wilson signed the Smith-Lever Act and established the Cooperative Extension Service in every state in the nation. Today Kentucky is joining the 75th anniversary celebration of this unique nationwide system, the educational arm of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Part of its uniqueness is that it is funded and guided by a partnership between federal, state and local governments.

Cooperative Extension of Kentucky actually began four years earlier in 1910 when the University of Kentucky hired 12 agricultural agents to travel throughout the Commonwealth and tell the people about the research and findings of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station.

Then, in 1916, the Kentucky legislature adopted the Smith-Lever Act and federal funds provided by the act were used to expand the work of the original 12 agents.

Currently 350 county agents work in teams in each of the state's 120 counties. The service also has some 125 area extension specialists and some 200 paraprofessionals who work with low-income families.

UK agriculture dean Oran Little estimates

Sue Carlin (r) and Glen Dale 4-H'ers that Kentucky extension agents make more than five million contacts with other Kentuckians each year.

"Whether it's helping one of our farmers run a more profitable business or helping one of our youngsters develop into a confident individual, extension professionals and volunteers spend countless hours working with people," Dean Little said.

Throughout the years, extension has made dramatic impacts on farming and farm communities. Baling tobacco, for example, was introduced by Kentucky extension agents some 10 years ago. Since that time, the new process — which replaced tying leaves by hand — has saved farmers about eight cents per pound because less labor is involved.

Tomatoes grown in Wayne County, Ky., can be found in markets from Lexington to Chicago to Cleveland. The tomatoes are part of a "cooperation" between Kentucky farmers Larry McKinley and James Sexton and Larry Snell, manager of Cumberland Farm Products Cooperative.

McKinley and Sexton grow the tomatoes and Snell sells them.

Approaching its 20th year, the co-op is considered the most successful in the state and one of the most successful in the nation.

"We depend on Extension for information on irrigation, varieties, pesticides, anything related to production," said Snell.

"We had labor force for tobacco and we could fit it (labor) right in with vegetable crops," he said. "Extension was our guiding light. We lean on it heavily."

They also were one of the first growers of horticultural crops to use trickle irrigation — a move that paid off handsomely during last summer's drought.

The Glen Dale Baptist Children's Home is using 4-H as an investment in the future — and it works.

Visitors on any day of the week will find some of the children who live at the home — from ages of 8 to 19 — feeding and caring for their 4-H project animals.

Each youngster makes a personal commitment to an animal project — horse, beef, swine, sheep, goat, dog or rabbit — and therefore, each youngster "owns" that animal. This includes the good and the bad — feeding, grooming, training for show or learning to ride the animal, plus dealing with sickness and injury, mucking the stalls and the risk of being kicked, thrown or stepped on.

It also means experiencing a birth and naming a newborn.

In Todd County, Allen and Jane Franks who have worked with the Extension Service for 24 years were named the nation's 1983 Conservation Farmers of the Year. "We figured if we could grow corn we could grow anything," said Franks. They have worked closely with Extension personnel to learn all they could about soil conservation and no-till planting.

Developed by Shirley H. Phillips, associate director of Extension at UK, the no-till method leaves a cover on the land at all times which reduces soil erosion and saves on labor and energy costs.

The Franks welcome tour groups to their farm to observe the results of their labor, and to see the unique irrigation system in which the hogs do their part to enrich the land. Swine wastes from the hog barns drain into a holding pond to be pumped through underground lines onto a growing crop.

Mary Ann Mason was a teenage mother and Betty Perry, a nutrition assistant for the Cooperative Extension Service in the Expanded Food and Nutrition Education Program (EFNEP). They met 17 years ago when Mary Ann was one of five children living in a shack with a mother who could not read or write, had no money, and was at the point of taking her life and that of her children. Perry changed all that.

She helped them get food stamps, taught the mother how to use them wisely and how to select food for her family. Later, she was able to help Mary Ann, who at age 15 gave birth to a son with several birth defects. "If it weren't for Betty Perry and EFNEP," said Mary Ann, "we probably wouldn't be doing so well now."

The success of this story has traveled throughout the nation and was recognized by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Last October, Mary Ann and Betty flew to Washington, D.C., to participate in the 20th anniversary celebration of EFNEP.

In addition to EFNEP, Cooperative Extension has piloted a new program, Mastery of Motherhood (MOM) in six Kentucky counties. The program is designed to help teens have a healthier pregnancy and get a better start for their unborn babies.

The county extension service, with its roots in rural America, is also a great asset to the city gardener or the suburban couple with a yard to tend. Look up your county agents. They're good people to know.

Come Blow

His energy and enthusiasm appear boundless. He is a gentle man who talks fast, moves fast, and seems anxious to please — which is exactly what he does when he picks up his trumpet and begins to play. The man works magic with that trumpet.

Vincent A. DiMartino, professor of trumpet and jazz ensembles in the College of Fine Arts, performs regularly on stages throughout the world. He premiered a new composition in Japan this summer that was written for him by his friend, Allen Vizzuti, and is appearing as soloist with the Cincinnati Pops on tour throughout Ohio.

President of the 4,000-member International Trumpet Guild, DiMartino is well known in music circles, and has performed on stage with many prestigious orchestras and solo artists. He has played many times with such jazz greats as Sarah Vaughn, Tony Bennett, Dave Brubeck, Dizzy Gillespie, Chuck Mangione, Lionel Hampton and Stan Getz. He has cut albums with the likes of Brubeck, Buddy Morrow, Cab Calloway, Doc Severinsen, and recently recorded an album with the Cincinnati Pops Orchestra, "Mancini's Greatest Hits." Two of his releases were recently listed in the Top 10 CD's in Billboard Magazine.

So what's he doing teaching school? Simply put, he loves teaching. It's always been his first choice. Forget whatever image you might have of a jazz musician and think about a scholar, because that's what he is. A scholar who enjoys teaching and its intrinsic rewards, who likes the time to develop and research new pieces, perform in recitals, and to practice.

DiMartino, a native of Long Island, New York, was invited to audition for a one-year appointment at UK when Dr. Hubert Henderson heard him play at the Bluegrass Festival with Lionel Hampton. That was 18 years ago.

Besides teaching more than 15 hours of individual trumpet lessons each week, DiMartino teaches classes made up of both his students and other trumpet majors. Since he can't teach all of the trumpet majors individually he says he tries to keep in contact with them all through the classes "to have a better idea of how everyone is doing." He also directs the UK Jazz Ensemble, and since 1973, has been a visiting professor of trumpet at the summer session of the Eastman School of Music in New York.

It's not unusual for DiMartino to "fly somewhere" on long week-end excursions and stay until Sunday performing and conducting seminars. He thinks it vital for him to be "out in the field reassessing what I thought I knew. Every month I find something new that needs to be addressed in my classes. You're always behind — and that's the way you can stay just a little behind — things are always developing and you can't really keep current. I constantly re-evaluate what I'm trying to do. It changes.

"We're all (at the University) dedicated to the improvement of the human condition, and for the majority of people it's true, the better your education, the more improvement to your situation. As an educator, that's my job.

"The University should be servicing history plus helping to shape the future. That's what a research institution does — it looks for the unattainable, and, in searching for that unattainable, it helps shape the future. We must have a vision and look toward that vision."

One of DiMartino's favorite methods of teaching is to try to put the students "in the experience. I believe in experiential education, the old apprentice method. Sometimes a student can't see the immediate relevance even though the things being taught are important." He uses the jazz ensemble as an example. "Sometimes I treat them as a professional jazz group, sometimes as a recording band, and sometimes as a show group.

"It's experience that makes a person have talent. Talent is not something that is inherited. Talent is consistent exposure to a specific element that makes a person more probable to do something."

Four-year-old Gabriel DiMartino might be proof of that. He plays trumpet, too, although "I didn't ask him to," said his dad.

He asked us to get him one." (Gabriel: a wonderful name for a boy who plays trumpet; "My wife Lydia named him. I'm not sure I would have done that," says DiMartino smiling.) They play trumpet duets together; Gabriel's favorites being the theme from Peter Gunn and the theme from Ghostbusters. "We have a really good time."

DiMartino was 12 when he started to play, "a little late — most people start at eight or nine." He began with group lessons in public school, "the same program everyone goes through when you rent your instrument.

"People say their lives change when they have a child. Mine has changed for the better. My own parents are wonderful and were the biggest influence on any success I might have. I hope I can help Gabriel learn and appreciate all the good things around him, too."

Mrs. DiMartino is the former Lydia Miller, a 1982 graduate of UK's College of Fine Arts. A flautist, she teaches music and creative movement at the Living Arts and Science Center in Lexington. She is also working toward a master's degree in library science at UK, and is planning to join the music faculty at Centre College this fall to teach flute.

The success DiMartino enjoys was highlighted in April when he was named a University of Kentucky Alumni Professor on Honors Day. One of the highest honors a UK faculty member can receive, the position carries a $5,000 annual stipend funded by alumni contributions to the UK Annual-Giving Fund. He is only the 12th person so honored since 1966.

Besides teaching, composing, traveling to performances and seminars, DiMartino plays in the faculty Brass Quintet, and along with Professor Schuyler Robinson, plays in an organ-trumpet duo in recitals around the country. He is also part of the Medi Ensemble, an electronic group which, he says, "is in line with perfecting the contemporary view of UK. President (David) Roselle has a real forward view of what a university is. He gets faculty members excited about the future."

DiMartino thinks that the worst thing a university can do is to say it has the best program to study anything. "You never have the best. You only have a valid program. The University is supposed to be on the cutting edge of the latest development or introduce the latest development. That's what research is. Re-search, is change, re-search is search, re-search is looking again and again and trying to find more meaning or a different meaning to what we do. That is the most essential thing the University of Kentucky can do.

"Our product, education, is developed because people need what we have. We don't need to offer things to be popular with the public. We need to offer things that are meaningful to the development of our state and the development of our people.

"Are we here for the improvement of our society or here just to maintain society?"

"That's the question we need to answer."

..... PRESIDENTIAL PERSPECTIVE

Fall is always an exciting time around a university. This fall has been especially exciting for the University of Kentucky.

Preliminary estimates show that UK once again has a record enrollment — 59,200 students. We have 23,100 enrolled at the Lexington campus and about 36,100 at the community colleges.

We are proud of the access to higher education our community colleges are providing Kentuckians in record numbers every year. We are also proud of the high quality of students entering the University in Lexington as freshmen. This year's freshman class of 2,700 has an average ACT score of 22.5 — some 3 points better than the national average.

During the summer, planning proceeded on several projects which will see fruition during this academic year:

- A Master Plan for the University is being created which addresses campus beautification and building use. Ralph Anderson, an engineering alumnus, has generously sponsored much of this work.

- A Strategic Plan for the University has been announced. The broad goals are to strengthen UK's commitment to scholarship and academic excellence; exert leadership on issues facing the state, nation and world; and strengthen the development and stewardship of UK's human, fiscal and physical resources.

- The Biennial Budget for the University, recently approved by the UK Board of Trustees, reflects the critical need UK has to make gains in funding and staff salaries at a competitive level, and to get funding necessary for the operation of UK's programs and physical plant.

The new academic year should also see come on line new buildings for regulatory services, agricultural engineering, and robotics and manufacturing systems. The College of Business and Economics will soon break ground for an addition to their building and a renovation of the present structure. Ashland, Paducah, Prestonsburg, and Somerset Community Colleges also are ready to begin some needed construction on their campuses.

UK's faculty continue to excell. We have more Fulbright Fellowships this year bringing to 21 the total awards to UK faculty in just the past five years. Our faculty also brought in a record $60 million in grants, contracts and gifts last year — a gain of some $12 million in this important area in just two years.

We also are very proud of our athletic program.

Under the leadership of C. M. Newton, basketball coach Rick Pitino and football coach Jerry Claiborne we expect an exciting year ahead. We also look forward to great things from other sports — including men's and women's cross country (the women were NCAA national champions last year), baseball, volleyball and tennis to mention a few.

We are very proud of the recognition Coach Claiborne and the football team brought to the University in winning the top academic award of the College Football Association.

As alumni we hope you will come to the campus for all the homecoming celebrations on the weekend of October 14, including the Rosemary Clooney concert on October 12. The Hall of Distinguished Alumni induction is October 13.

We look forward to seeing you soon at these and other events.

Sincerely,
