UK loses some funding for priority projects

By Troy Lyle
THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Several of UK's building projects suffered funding cuts in a budget passed late Monday night by the Kentucky Senate. Meanwhile, the Senate approved bonding for a previously unheard-of UK basketball practice facility.

The numbers, made available yesterday, show that the Senate's budget cut more than $170 million in UK funding from the House of Representatives budget passed Feb. 18.

The Senate erased all funding for three projects, including a proposed student health facility that the House had funded at $24 million. K-Lair renovations and an air conditioning installation for Keeneland Hall also lost all the funded allotted from the House.

Funding for a proposed bio-pharmaceutical complex — which UK President Lee Todd called his "top priority" — dropped from $40 million to $32 million, and the bonding for an expansion of the Chandler Medical Center was cut by over half from $250 million to $100 million.

Amid these cuts, the Senate allocated $15 million for a new basketball practice facility, which Todd said wasn't on the university's list of priorities.

"It's something we've talked about because we've got a premier basketball program and need space for volleyball and gymnastics," Todd said. "It's unclear how we'd fund that on bonding right now."

Worse, if UK can't come up with the needed $8 million for the $40 million bio-pharmaceutical complex, it may have to stall that and other building progress, Todd said.

"There appears to be the general assumption from legislators and the business world that we're inefficiently run, or that we probably have the money we need anyway," Todd said. "We need to dispel that myth."

"We need to have a common vocabulary to convince them that we don't have an $8 million wall of money lying around here because we really don't."

The Senate is proposing to cut more than $300 million in funding

Michael Leahy talked last night to a full crowd in Memorial Hall about his recovery from a sex addiction. He discussed the dangers of pornography.

Reborn after Porn

Former sex addict reflects on journey to recovery

By Doug Scott
THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

Recovering sex addict Michael Leahy's addiction to pornography was once so consuming, it nearly caused him to end his own life, he said.

The speaker recounted the details of his sordid past to a crowded Memorial Hall last night, warning students against the dangers of sexual addiction and its prevalence in society.

"The porn industry, just as an example, is a $12 to $14 billion industry. To put that in perspective, that's in excess of the combined revenues of professional football, baseball and basketball franchises in this country. That's more money than CBS, NBC and ABC generate," Leahy said.

Leahy's presentation, "Porn Nation: The Naked Truth," incorporated video interviews and Leahy's onstage testimony on the effects of pornography on people and how it can lead to sexual addiction. The focus of Leahy's presentation was on what he calls "sex syndrome," or having an increased obsession with sex.

The video included interviews with a former Playboy Playmate and other recovering sex addicts whose lives were turned upside down by their addictions to porn and decadent sexual lifestyles.

"It was so non-condescending and made you want to watch it," said Rose Glasser, a mechanical engineering freshman. "It was even better than what I expected."

Also featured were interviews with psychologists and authors, with one likening the power of sex syndrome to the ring in The Lord of the Rings, where the ring has an increasing drawing power over its owner.

"There's something about our biological makeup as sexual beings that allows us to thankfully procreate our species on this planet, but at the same time it's also being misused or abused by others to get us to do or believe or to act on certain things," Leahy said.

He received a standing ovation at the end.

"I was very happy that someone was willing to reveal the truth about how pornography affects our society," said Aaron Treesh, a finance junior who is involved with Campus Crusade for Christ, one of the event's sponsors. The Student Activities Board, Fellowship of Christian Athletes and The Rock also sponsored Leahy's visit.

Leahy's story with porn dated back to age 11. He said that his relationship with porn took away from his relationships with women, making him view them as objects of conquest.

His sexual addiction eventually led to an affair with a woman who embodied the ideals he had found in pornography and the termination of his 13-year marriage to his wife, with whom he had two sons.

"It was good that he shared his own personal story," said Will Branham, an undeclared freshman. "It made it easier to relate to."

Leahy, along with many of those interviewed in the video, attributed his recovery from sexual addiction to his spiritual faith.

Leahy gave the student audience the option of leaving the hall before he began his last segment on spirituality, after which he invited students to join him in a prayer that he said when he was searching for help in his recovery.

Leahy said religion has turned his life around since he first said that prayer after his divorce.

"It's been a very humbling experience," Leahy said.

Provost could learn UK fate today

By Adam Sichko
THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

UK Provost Mike Nietzel — second-in-command to President Lee Todd — could learn today if he has been chosen as the next president of Southwest Missouri State University.

The SMS Board of Governors meets today to discuss, at the very least, the three finalists to become the university's next president.

Students can make a difference for civil liberties by joining organizations and standing up for human rights and the law, Cole said to about 50 people in attendance.

This nation's government has sought the course of least resistance to protecting personal liberties and America, Cole said. "We have greatly fallen down on our commitment to equality," he said. Cole believes our nation is experiencing the largest example of ethnic profiling after the Sept. 11 attacks since World War II, when the U.S. government interned Japanese-Americans.

Cole said to an extent, he understands that the U.S. government had to initially take extensive security actions to prevent further attacks on American soil.

"Punishing someone for past actions is OK, but it puts extreme stress on the law when punishing people who you suspect may harm others in the future," Cole said.

"On Sept. 12, 2001, we had the world's sympathy, but we have squandered that sympathy."

Cole's speech is part of the College of Arts and Sciences year-long series of events on homeland security said Joan Callahan, director of UK's women's studies program.

"The program's objective is to generate conversation across the disciplines about homeland security," she said. "Our goal is to bring scholars together to talk about the emerging phenomenon of homeland security that exists in our culture since Sept. 11, 2001."

Water hike lowered; refunds on the way

By Elizabeth Troutman
THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

Central Kentucky residents will receive a reimbursement this month for overages charged to their water bills from the past three months.

Monday, the Kentucky Public Service Commission ordered an 8.8 percent increase in water rates — less than half of the 17 percent increase already implemented by Kentucky-American Water Co. at the start of December. Customers will receive refunds in the form of a credit to their accounts, the company said in a press release.

"The order is long and detailed, and we will promptly begin reviewing it to ensure that our customers' bills are properly adjusted," said Nick Rowe, president of Kentucky-American, in the press release.

The average "central division" customer will pay $1.64 more per month under the 8.8 percent increase. The central division includes Fayette County and five of its six neighboring counties.

Susan Lanzo, communications manager for Kentucky-American, said the rate provides necessary funding for the water company to maintain its reputation of providing high-quality water to Kentuckians.

"As we make additional investments in the system and as we improve infrastructure, there is a cost for all of those," she said. "We are certainly prudent," she said.

The Public Service Commission told Kentucky-American it would make a decision on the rate increase by December 2004. The water company implemented the 17 percent increase without the commission's approval.

The rate increase approved by the commission was lower than what Kentucky-American had anticipated, Lanzo said.

Lanzo expects the rate of water to continue to increase. "That rate will remain until Kentucky-American will file for another rate increase, whenever we feel it is appropriate to."

Expert: Foreigners targeted by Homeland Security

By Jeff Fisher
THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

America has unjustly detained more than 5,000 foreign nationalists since December 2001, without charging any of them with a terrorist crime, said David Cole, a law professor at Georgetown University.

"Our government says, 'We will sacrifice foreign nationals' rights, Arabs and Muslims most notably for Americans' security,'" said Cole of the U.S. Preventive Detention Campaign.

Cole spoke about homeland security and issues surrounding the human rights of foreign nationalists in America after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in the Student Center's Center Theatre last night.

Students can make a difference for civil liberties by joining organizations and standing up for human rights and the law, Cole said to about 50 people in attendance.

This nation's government has sought the course of least resistance to protecting personal liberties and America, Cole said. "We have greatly fallen down on our commitment to equality," he said. Cole believes our nation is ex-for Kentucky's universities. But it added $200 million for renovations of up to 17 Kentucky courthouses and $84 million for renovating the capital office building — neither of which were included in the House or governor's budget proposals.

Sen. Charlie Borders, R-Russell, chairman of the Senate Appropriations and Revenue Committee, said the Senate's budget plan provides for the state's core needs and would help to create jobs.

"This budget is economic development-driven," he said, referring to more than $300 million the Senate budgeted for new construction and renovations for all of the state's universities.

Sen. Ernesto Scorsone, D-Lexington, said the basketball facility shows that the Senate doesn't have its priorities straight.

"No one knows where this basketball project came from — no one's taking responsibility for adding it to the budget," Scorsone said. "I'm not saying it wouldn't be nice to have a new basketball practice facility, but not at the expense of a student health services building."

House Majority Caucus Chairman Robert Damron said the spending on state courthouses is misplaced.

"It looks to me that the money cut from universities is being spent on new offices for Kentucky's judges," said Damron. D-Nicholasville said. "They (senators) are forgetting that higher education is the economic engine for this state."

"If you aren't funding higher education then this state isn't going to grow," he said.

The decision to decrease funding for UK's priority list of projects while adding a basketball practice facility makes no sense, Damron said.

"It isn't good for UK, unless you want to trade a basketball practice facility for a student health services building," he said.

Scorsone said the Senate budget is a "band-aid" at best.

"The bills will be paid, but there's $400 million in debt that we have no means of generating revenues for," he said. "Unless something happens, we're going to be short $400 million next year."

"This by no means is a long-term solution to Kentucky's problems." E-mail: tylie@kykernel.com

Other News

Tax modernization

Prior to passing its version of the 2005 fiscal year budget, the Senate unanimously approved a tax modernization plan. Included in that tax plan are tax increases. The plan adds 26 cents in tax per pack to cigarettes, and increases the alcohol tax by 2 percent, to 11 percent total.

Tuition tax credit

The Senate's budget includes a $500 tax credit for all undergraduate students from Kentucky who attend a university in the state. The House of Representatives previously approved this measure.

Financial aid

Under the Senate's budget, student financial aid would reach its highest level ever. The Senate allotted $192 million for this fiscal year and $5 million more for the 2005-06 fiscal year.

Next step

The House will now review the Senate's budget and tax reform proposals. If the House doesn't accept the Senate's plan, the two groups will negotiate in a joint committee.

THEATRICAL RELEASES

Be Cool

The sequel to 1995's Get Shorty, this film is also based on a novel by crime-writing master Elmore Leonard. John Travolta, terribly in need of a comeback a la Pulp Fiction, returns as Hollywood wannabe/mafioso Chili Palmer. Tired of movies and up to his slicked-back hair in trouble, he enters an industry even more manufactured than the movies: pop music. Getting started, however, proves to be more difficult than he thinks, and he runs afoul of a bevy of co-stars, including Uma Thurman, Vince Vaughn, Danny DeVito and the Rock (who has now made enough in Hollywood to go by his real name, Dwayne Johnson). At Regal and Woodhill.

The Jacket

This drug trip of a psychological thriller features the plight of a military veteran who gets accented on the way home. Adrien Brody stars as the veteran who, during a bout of recurrent amnesia, is accused of murder and placed deep in the bowels of a strange mental institution run by Kris Kristofferson, which is creepy enough on its own. Thrown into the dark, confined on a smorgasbord of drugs, he's able to launch himself in the future, only to find himself incongruously dead. The why and how are lost to him, and only the adult version of a girl (Keira Knightley) he met years ago can help him solve the mystery as he drifts in and out of conscious states. At Lexington Green, Regal and Woodhill.

The Pacifier

Vin Diesel, in movie purgatory for doing The Chronicles of Riddick (which would have won an Oscar if it had been a silent film), stars in this hideous example of Hollywood self-leeching. Diesel is entirely miscast as a fish out of water who suddenly has to take care of children as penance — or who knows what. In a film that looks this bad, logic and general expectations are too low or non-existent to really offer

DVD RELEASES

Exorcist: The Beginning

This prequel to the horror classic stars Peter Sarsgaard in a gee-whiz attempt to explain a backstory, instead of worrying about the unexplainable and the ineffable — and making Father Merrin out to be a titan of faith — Sarsgaard is cast as a shattered onlooker to World War II, who unleashes the same horror he faced in the original film. In other words, a bunch of hacks want to take a well-crafted classic and turn it into the same terrible, trite, banal, moronic slop that passes as a good horror film in the current genre glut. It's scary because you feel it, not because you show it. End rant.

Flight of the Phoenix

The only flying film did was out of theaters and onto shelves. Watch at your own risk. The plot, or whatever you would call it, involves a bunch of social outcasts stranded in the desert after their cheap charter plane crashes. So it's a bunch of C-listers who crashed in Oakland? Hmm ... doesn't sound like much of a plot. But this isn't much of a movie. Can these misfits join together with the engineer mysteriously in their midst to build another plane and save them all from certain doom?

The SpongeBob SquarePants Movie

Follow the harrowing adventures of SpongeBob and Patrick as they journey to Shell City to take back King Neptune's stolen crown and do battle with the nefarious Plankton. It's surprisingly entertaining — especially when "Baywatch" curmudgeon David Hasselhoff and his incredible pectoral antics make an appearance.

Wonder Woman: Season 2

Lynda Carter, in her pre-contact promotion days, dons the spandex leotard for more adventures as the mighty Amazon Princess. In the second season, she moves from World War II escapades to fighting in the modern era — which at that time was the 1980s. Instead of fighting Nazis et al., she now finds herself facing off against the oh-so-unusual modern horrors of nuclear power and computer technology gone awry. But there's still no invisible jet, and the best fight scene is her daring showdown with Astigmatism.

Eisley equalizes pop, talent

By Ryan Ebelhar
KERNEL MUSIC CRITIC

Do we have a new Hanson for the 21st century?

It's possible, but there are some key differences between new band Eisley and their pop counterparts.

First thing is first: The strangely attractive females in this band actually are females and not odd attractions for Glen Quagmire to become distraught over years later.

Second, this brother/sister (and a friend from down the street) actually possess the ability to write songs that display such crazy notions as "depth."

Trust me, there is no "MMMBop 2006" on this album.

Room Noises is the debut album from Texas-based Eisley, and it does not fail to live up to the hype. Given an opening slot on Coldplay's U.S. tour, buzz around Eisley has been building for two years.

Spots on MTV's "You Hear It First," Entertainment Weekly's "Bands on the Brink" and Blender's "The Next Big Thing" promised that a loyal following would pop up.

The songs on this album are a great combination of pop and rock, but never straying into the world of "Top-40" radio. They take advantage of a brilliant production team and the use of lush harmonies and keyboards to give the album a very full sound.

Their lyrics aren't typical pop songs either. They actually have much more in common with William Blake than Britney Spears.

The lyrics are quite complex and creative for a group of college-age students living in a world of Toby Keiths and Ryan Cabreras.

I certainly recommend picking up this album at CD Central.

It's well worth the $14 and a healthy alternative to the mindless crap on the radio right now.

Eisley will be performing at Jillian's in Louisville on March 17, but I don't recommend going unless you can stomach sitting through garbage like New Found Glory first.

#5 | JOSH CARRIER

Talent senior carried role as leader

By Chris Fisher
THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

Josh Carrier doesn't have the numbers.

Don't look for Carrier, who will probably start but see only limited minutes, to make any significant dents in the box score at the end of the night.

What Carrier, who averages just a shade over one point per game for his career, brings to this UK team doesn't show up in box scores.

The NCAA doesn't keep stats for the constant effort he brings in practice everyday.

The 3-pointers he huries in general Coliseum will never get the single point on the Rupp Arena scoreboard.

But make no mistake, the senior leadership Carrier provides both on and off the court does translate into game action.

Along with UK coach Tubby Smith and fellow senior Chuck Hayes, that is the function that Carrier serves for this year's youthful squad.

"I knew I could be a leader," Carrier said. "Talent-wise I really can't say too much, but sometimes if the team isn't bringing energy or making the extra pass, they take it better when it comes from a teammate than they would a coach."

"I just want to be there for them and set a good example. I'm just trying to help the team win."

Hayes said being a leader while playing a minimal role can be hard, but it's not hard to see why Carrier has garnered everyone's respect.

"It's hard, but Josh has taken it well," he said. "Josh has always been a person that the guys look up to in the locker room because he does so many good things off the court. He has really taken a leadership role on this team."

It was with Hayes the last four years that Carrier has forged a lasting friendship.

"I've grown up with him," Carrier said. "We have a lot of similarities, a lot of the same tastes. We've been through a lot of good times and bad times."

"With Team Turmoil, a lot of late night talks really brought us together. I look at

"I knew I could be a leader ... I just want to be there for them and set a good example."

him as a brother now, not just a teammate. We're always going to stay in touch."

In their respective four years, Carrier and Hayes have helped UK win 103 of 125 games (82 percent), two Southeastern Conference regular season and tournament titles.

As remarkable as that run has been, it's something else that Carrier says he's most proud of — earning a college degree. He'll graduate in May with a business marketing degree.

"College basketball is very time consuming," Carrier said. "You don't feel like studying every night. You don't feel like going to class after a 6 a.m. practice, but our academic advisers and Coach Smith do a good job of staying after us. Graduating in four years is big for me."

Another lesson Carrier can teach the younger players is one in humility.

Carrier, who was rumored to be all but gone after each new influx of talent, averages less than six minutes per game for his career and has sacrificed individual goals for something bigger — team success.

"At a place like Kentucky, you have to compete for your job everyday," Carrier said. "It's hard, but you're a part of something special here, and so you really can't complain."

"I'm a big believer that everything happens for a reason. God put me here and kept me here. I've had a great life and a great career here, so I can't ask for much more."

Carrier intends to pursue a master's in business administration from UK. He also didn't close the door on becoming a coach himself, hoping to begin as a graduate assistant if the opportunity presented itself.

Smith said that although tonight will be a special one for both Carrier and Hayes, he reminded everyone this season is far from over.

"Josh and Chuck are two young men we wish we had back year after year," he said.

"They're the type of young men that really represent what you want in a student-athlete. We're really proud, and I know I'm proud to have been associated and had a chance to coach these young men."

"Hopefully, we'll be seeing a lot more of them. We've still got a lot of basketball to play."

#44 | CHUCK HAYES

Hayes stays humble amidst stardom

By Ben Roberts
THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

It would have been easy for Chuck Hayes to get caught up in the hype.

The UK senior traveled the 2,400 miles from Modesto, Calif., to Lexington four years ago, and has since become one of the most recognizable Wildcat players in recent memory.

In the last four years, Hayes has started more than 100 straight games, led his team to two conference championships and emerged this season as an All-American candidate.

But those who know him when he was just a high school kid from Modesto say he hasn't changed at all.

"I've coached him since the fifth grade, and he's exactly the same," said Modesto Christian coach Gary Porter. "He was God out here in high school basketball, and it never changed him one bit — not one bit. He's just a great human being — that's my favorite part about him."

Hayes will be joined on the Rupp Arena floor tonight by his parents, Charles and Tracey, to celebrate his four-year career and his final game in Lexington.

Tracey Hayes worked two jobs to help pay for the expensive tuition at Modesto Christian High School, and Charles Hayes is a warehouse worker, who Porter said instilled the ideals of hard work in his son.

That blue-collar effort is evident in the way Chuck Hayes looks at his success.

"You can get caught up in the hype; you can get big headed; you can think you're better than everyone else, or you can take it in stride and realize the situation you're in," Hayes said. "And enjoy it. Enjoy the moment and enjoy the love they're giving you."

But the accolades and attention weren't always things the humble Hayes was able to handle. Porter recalled a time after a game during Hayes' junior season in high school when the player struggled to embrace the interest his fans were beginning to show.

"One night about five or six little kids came up wanting to know where he was, and I said I didn't know," Porter said. "I went back to the locker room, and Chuck was just sitting back there by himself. I said, 'Hey Chuck, what's the

“ He just played hard, did what he was asked, and led by example.”

— Gary Porter

Chuck Hayes' high school coach

"He said, 'Aw Gary those little kids want my autograph, but I'm just a high school player.' I said, 'You need to take that as an honor. That's where you're at right now. They love you.'"

With his hardnosed play on the court and quiet, respectful demeanor away from basketball, it didn't take long for Hayes to gain that same love from his teammates, coaches and UK fans. "He was one of those guys that rose to the top," said UK head coach Tubby Smith. "So we did try to build the program around him. You have to have someone you can look at and say, 'This guy projects the image.' And that's what I appreciate about him."

And after a freshman season that saw the Cats lose 10 games, Hayes picked up on the high expectations of UK fans just as quick.

"You just don't lose — plain and simple," he said. "You don't lose at Rupp. You don't lose to teams you should beat. You don't lose around here, and that was something I had to get used to."

Tonight's game against Tennessee will mark the 102nd consecutive start for Hayes — eight shy of the 56-year-old school record held by Alex Groza.

The streak was put in jeopardy after the UK senior suffered a broken nose Jan. 25 at Tennessee. Hayes was forced to wear a protective mask for the next five games.

Porter, who said Hayes was never injured during the eight years he coached him, wasn't surprised by his quick return.

"That's him," Porter said. "He didn't miss high school practices. He didn't loaf. He didn't try to cut corners. He just played hard, did what he was asked and led by example."

That leadership is what has translated to Hayes' teammates more than anything else.

While he isn't going to break any single-game scoring records or make Sportscenter's top plays with an earth-shattering dunk, Hayes leads by example and does the little things that have guided UK to an 86-15 record while he's in the starting lineup.

"He's the reason we win really," said junior guard Ravi Moss. "If you want someone to put up 25 points every game, it's not Chuck. But if you want somebody to do all the right things, Chuck Hayes is the guy."

Moss said his "do-whatever-it-takes" team-first philosophy came from watching Hayes and trying to emulate him. Since Moss came to UK as a walk-on three years ago, the two players have formed a special bond.

Hayes seeks out Moss before every game for their traditional chest bump at halfcourt, and Moss said the two have played their fair share of competitive games of Madden at Wildcat Lodge.

The junior said it would be hard to see his friend and teammate play at home for the last time.

"It's going to be tough," Moss said. "Hopefully the video won't be too long — I don't want to get too emotional."

Hayes isn't sure whether he'll be moved to tears during tonight's ceremony, but the man who watched him grow from a shy fifth-grader into the 6-foot-6, 242-pound warrior he is today has no doubts.

"I know he will," Porter said. "His dad will be there. His mom will be there. He'll have tears. He cried the day we played our last game. Cried right on my shoulder — about soaked me to death."

"They'll have to wipe the floor off when he's done," he said.

When Porter was in Lexington for last month's Florida game, he said Perry — who he had never met — gave him a hug and said, "I want to be just like Chuck."

"He does everything he's supposed to do in the classroom — he does everything he's supposed to do away from basketball," Perry said. "And his competitiveness — his willingness to do whatever he has to do to get the win. He's the definition of a leader."

As Perry spoke, a strange voice interrupted him from the other side of the door to the Memorial Coliseum locker room.

"Stop smiling Robert. Stop smiling you big dummy. This is no laughing matter."

And although Perry couldn't see the person disguising his voice, he knew it was Chuck Hayes.

"He's a funny guy," Perry said with a grin. "That's what I'm going to miss about him. He's just a great guy."

Hasn't changed a bit.

IN OUR OPINION

UK should be able to issue its own bonds

A version of the state budget passed this week by the state Senate left out an important provision from the House draft. House majority caucus chairman Robert Damron, D-Nicholasville, helped pass language in the House budget bill that would allow state universities more flexibility in securing their own bonds for building projects.

Other than fear of ceding power, there's no reason the Senate shouldn't allow the provision into the final budget bill.

President Lee Todd told the Kernel yesterday that two of UK's top priorities — a pharmaceutical research lab and an expansion to the Chandler Medical Center — are awaiting bonds before construction can begin.

The House already approved each bond for their full amounts — $40 million for the pharmacy lab and $250 million for the hospital. But the Senate version reduces the pharmacy lab to $32 million and the hospital project to $100.

Todd said the Senate has promised the rest of the funding for the hospital would come in another session.

But, Todd said, granting the bonds in one sum would be cheaper. Besides, UK already has its own funding for these projects.

"I'm still coming in here from the business world, and seeing, even though we have the hospital revenues and student fees to go to a bonding agency and get our own money to do that, I'm still surprised we have to wait until the state gives us the authority to spend our own money," he said.

Opponents of granting more bonding power to state universities claim that too many bonds used improperly would harm the state's credit rating.

Todd and State Treasurer Jonathan Miller say that won't be the case.

"If I go down to the bank with my child to get a loan, and the bank gives the loan figuring, 'This is Lee Todd's child, so they're probably good for it,' if I don't cosign the loan, my credit wouldn't be affected," Todd said. "If we don't ask the state to sign for anything, they won't be responsible."

Plus, Damron's bill would grant Miller oversight power, making him able to deny bonds to schools that might not be able to pay for them.

"You couldn't just go say, 'We're going to build four dorms,' and hope they come," Todd said. "The institutions have to be able to sit down in front of a bonding agency and convince them they're able to secure that funding."

The state legislature has already proven quite capable of needlessly holding up building projects by its inability to pass a budget.

Forty-four states already allow states bonding power, many of which without government oversight. Kentucky should become the 45th state to grant more control over its universities' growth.

Issuing its own bonds would give UK the ability to move forward with projects currently held up by state legislators.

AARON SMITH, THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

Moderate TV viewers will have to be patient

The TV generation is in its heyday, reality shows are at an all-time high (or low, depending on viewpoints) and at this point in time, dropping the queen mother of all swears on the air could net you a fine greater than dumping "nuclear" waste into a source of drinking water for a major metropolitan area.

It is difficult to argue against the fact that entertainment standards are dropping. Forty years ago, showing a married couple sharing a bed on TV would have been an abomination. Elvis was censored on Ed Sullivan for shaking his hips, and people were actually entertained by the fact that Lassie could seemingly understand what little Timmy was saying.

Four decades down the road, it's always one more step, one more thing, how much farther can the envelope be pushed. The massive volcanic pressure built and built in the entertainment industry until a nipple was all it took to unleash the apocalyptic explosion that the Federal Communications Commission rained down like fire and brimstone upon Sodom and Gomorrah.

How did things ever get this bad?
Fast forward to a year later:
It's Super Bowl time and everyone and their mother has the TV prepped and ready to go so they can watch the next cataclysm forcing the fundamentalist right-wing America, Jerry Falwell and the FCC into a nuclear convulsion.

In what was either the height of prudence or the mother of all asinities, certain commercials were even banned. I watched one online, a beer commercial that pokes fun at last year's mishap and blames it on a beer-loving stagehand who cracks open a bottle on Janet's dress.

Instead, Paul McCartney serenaded the nation with his crooning, a soothing relief from the screaming pop culture. Sure, McCartney looked a little older, a little rougher and his voice may not have the same strength as it did when he, John, Ringo and George were tearing it up over the face of this benighted rock, but he did extremely well at putting on a good show. I was impressed.

The next day, people were whining and moaning that the show wasn't exciting enough. Mind you, many of these are the same people who reacted with shock and awe to the horror that is a Janet Jackson wardrobe malfunction and the fact that they'll have to fork over some sweet moolah for their kids' therapy.

At this point, it's come down to the decision of ethics over entertainment. Everything has a limit.

The hype over the Super Bowl has settled down and while the cat's away, the mice will play, with TV back to pushing the envelope, much to the chagrin of middle-of-the-road Joe viewers like myself, who have their principles laid out. We'll be content to sit back and cringe at the thought that another incident will send the nation into a self-righteous uproar.

The only reason these programs and their idiotic depravity succeed is because people watch them. It's the same principles behind soap operas. The only reason they succeed is because life, unfortunately, is comprised largely of fake people over-dramatizing life's little events, and the soaps are truer to life than most people want or care to admit.

Though it may have the same effect as having a conversation with a wall, my plea is for the next generation to start taking matters into their own hands. Like the annoying little sibling poking you in the arm, if you don't pay attention, they will eventually stop. If people stop encouraging the entertainment business to put more violence, more sex, more drugs and more stupidity into TV movies and music, then it will eventually stop.

It may take a while, but Rome wasn't built in a day, the Eiffel Tower didn't build itself and UK didn't establish its superiority over upstart programs like Duke in a single season.

Meanwhile, middle-of-the-road viewers like myself are off somewhere awaiting the next disaster, tinfol hats at the ready and TVs set to reruns of MacGyver on TV Land.

Porno piety gives me anxiety

Adult film: It's a multibillion-dollar industry everyone loves to hate.

And I don't understand the hang-ups society has with pornography.

Porn catches hell from the self-righteous, the feminists, the clergy — pretty much everyone.

Personally, I have no problem with porn; it doesn't really do anything for me. It's kind of like Howard Stern's radio show — I simply choose not to watch it.

But for those who enjoy watching porn, I think that's great — if it brings you pleasure and it's not hurting anyone, why not?

So I don't think you're pious if you denounce adult films, and I don't think you're perverted if you don't.

But, if you view porn, just do it in moderation. Like everything else in life, from downing food and alcohol to blogging, such endeavors only become dangerous when they become an obsession.

If a porn fixation has progressed to staying at home to masturbate in lieu of socializing, that's a definite problem.

But ultimately, it's the fault of the person. We humans can choose to be stronger than our vices.

And, contrary to popular belief, the industry does not irreparably demean women.

Famous (or infamous, depending on your perspective) adult film star Jenna Jameson is an unconventional icon for strong women. She's written a New York Times best seller, How to Make Love Like a Porn Star: A Cautionary Tale. She runs her own Web site, www.ClubJenna.com and owns the rights to her movies — all of which are best-sellers, as well, by the way — and, since she owns the rights to those films, she'll receive fees from her distributors well past her mattress-dancing days.

And, to top it off, she openly admits her love for what she does.

"My first love is sex," Jameson said in an interview with Paper Magazine. "Not acting. I'm not Meryl Streep."

In the same interview, Jameson went on to discuss how she debated Bill O'Reilly on his show after he criticized Pony sneakers for using her in an ad campaign.

"I've been working my ass off to go to Middle America and take a stand that porn is not dirty, it's not unacceptable," Jameson said. "No one in their right mind would go on 'Bill O'Reilly'. But I felt an obligation to women to go there because he didn't take me seriously before I got there."

Jameson's serious, all right — in 2001, the not-so-dumb blonde debated the merits of porn with a panel of anti-porn activists at England's Oxford University and won the debate 204 to 27.

"They can't argue with me by saying, 'This is degrading to women,'" Jameson told Paper. "So they say, 'How does it make you feel when children get their hands on porn?' My response is, 'Well, sex is a natural thing.'"

"I think the most appalling thing is that parents agree to let the computer or the television or the PlayStation baby-sit their children. And then they want to blame me? Maybe you shouldn't leave your pornos out."

Jameson's unabashed honesty is refreshing. She's taken her assets — beauty and business savvy — to build a veritable empire.

It's just the subject matter of that empire that disturbs a lot of people.

And I don't think it should. It's a multibillion-dollar industry — that's a lot of people watching a lot of porn, whether they admit it or not.

But pornography itself isn't the source of the problem. Instead, it's something that lies much deeper.

The problem lies in obsession — when people get so caught up in one thing, focusing on it entirely, they choose to blame the fixation, not their own lack of self-control.

It's a gross lack of personal responsibility that makes my stomach churn.

To me, there's no difference between someone who blames pornography for all their problems and the person who blames some abstract notion of "society" for everything that's wrong with the world.

Pornography itself isn't wrong or evil. It's the immature overindulgence that's the real issue.

And as for porn demeaning women, Jameson's empowering answer says it best: "The way I look at it, the only reason this industry is successful is because of me and all the other beautiful girls."

MONEY MATTERS | Savvy saving and spending

Getting fit without going broke

It seems to be the common trend about this time every year: The gyms are filled to capacity and the sidewalks get taken over by the student Cardiovascular Club. Everyone wants to be in shape for Spring Break.

Kenny Moyer
FINANCE COLUMNIST

With less than two weeks left, students all over campus are trying there hardest — not to excel in the classroom, but to look the most fit when walking along the beach for that one week of vacation.

Many students began their Spring Break body-shaping efforts months ago. Don't be alarmed — there is still hope to boost your fitness level, as long as you're smart about it.

To gain a more slender figure, students often resort to spending heavy amounts of dollars to purchase body-forging products like energy pills or protein shake mixes.

A supply of either of these products can cost anywhere from an arm to a leg — or both — at local nutrition stores and the products, more often than not, do more harm than good as they're not approved by the Food and Drug Administration.

There are easier — and healthier — alternatives. People always ask me, "Kenny, how do you stay so buff?" (Insert laugh here.) My theory is that you don't have to spend a gazillion dollars on placebo-type products or join an expensive off-campus gym to get the right results. Using your resources is the ultimate way to developing a healthy physique while saving money at the same time.

Much like creating a budget, the key to success in this area of life is developing a routine. You have to dedicate time to go to the gym and know what results you want. One of the hardest things to do in college is maintain a schedule that doesn't interfere with a social life. In weeks past, I would start working out the first few days of the week and by the time the weekend rolled around, I would be too tired to even think about rolling out of bed.

Don't do that. Instead, try and stay consistent for these remaining weeks and you may see some fast results. I like to use the every-other-day method. I will lift weights one day and the next, I'll run a few miles.

Dyson Carroll, a kinesiology senior and personal trainer at the Underground Fitness Center in the basement of Donovan Hall, recommended starting a cardiovascular program to elevate your heart rate to more than 90 beats per minute.

"Running three times a week for 30 minutes a day is a good start," Carroll said. The next important factor is your diet. With school, parties and whatever other boring things your life entails, it's often hard to find the time or energy to eat right.

Still, eating right and getting enough sleep are crucial in any efforts to chisel your mind and body. I'm not going to get too technical, but try to eat three healthy meals a day. (By healthy, I don't mean eating a Tolly-Ho burger and cheddar tots every meal.)

I'm talking meals with fruit, green vegetables and not-always-red meats. Grilled fish and chicken are good alternatives. You can save money not only by staying away from fast-food joints but also by purchasing healthier products in bulk at a lesser cost. Visit a nearby grocery for more details.

Carroll suggested staying away from foods with high fat content, and closely watching your daily calorie and carbohydrate intake.

"While at the grocery, try to shop on the outside of the aisles," he said. "Most of the foods around the perimeter are low in calories and not processed." Protein shakes seem to be very popular for today's athletes. Males and females will consume these thick drinks with excessive amounts of protein to help the growth and repair of muscle tissues. The powdered drink mixes can be purchased at many nutrition stores for more than $40.

Not only will this be a short supply, but you'll also notice excessive amounts of protein will often give you gas that would even make Pepe Le Peu gag.

What a lot of people don't realize is that protein is already in many of the foods we eat: meat, fish, eggs and milk. If we are looking to over-indulge ourselves on our natural daily intake, try using regular household ingredients to concoct your own shake. I generally mix milk, bananas, peanut butter and Carnation Instant Breakfast in a blender and voila: a nutritional drink with multi-vitamins and plenty of protein, all natural and pretty cheap.

Just remember, if you are taking in too much protein, the protein will end up just exiting your body anyway," Carroll said.

Don't forget to prepare your body not only for the beach but also for the "extracurricular" activities during the week.

"We all know what goes on during Spring Break," Carroll said. "Start hydrating your body now, by drinking eight to 12 cups of water a day."

Finally students have free access to the Johnson Center on South Campus. Part of your individual tuition actually covers the expense of using the center, which makes it hard for me to imagine wanting to work out elsewhere. This gym offers everything from free weights and an indoor track to an indoor rock-climbing wall. They also offer free workout classes.

The Underground Fitness Center is another alternative for students living on campus. By working out during off-peak hours, usually early in the morning or late at night, you can avoid the heavy workout traffic in either of these places.

In the end, sticking to a healthy diet and proper workout routine and staying away from expensive and unnecessary dietary supplements will save you mega-bucks — and you'll even get in shape while watching your budget.

Participants from last year's Greek sing perform onstage for the trophy and "bragging rights." This year's Greek Sing will be held in Memorial Coliseum Saturday at 7 p.m. Tickets cost $7 in advance, $10 at the door.

My big, fat Greek Sing on Saturday

By Alice Haymond
THE KENTUCKY KERNEL

It takes months to prepare. It's the biggest Greek event of the year: It's Greek Sing, organized by Chi Omega and Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

Participants from about 30 sororities and fraternities will present their choreographed dances with wild costumes to showcase their talent Saturday.

"We started preparing last semester; it takes months and months," said pharmacy freshman Allison Powell, a Sigma Kappa, when asked how long it's taken to prepare for this event.

Tyler Emig, an undeclared freshman and an Alpha Tau Omega, said, "We have meetings starting about two weeks before the event, but we won last year so this year we aren't putting in as much effort."

So, what does the winner receive?

"Well, we got a trophy but the real prize is bragging rights for the rest of the year," Emig said. "Winning the Greek Sing is a big thing."

Each year, Chi Omega and Sigma Alpha Epsilon coordinate Greek Sing, and each year it just gets bigger and bigger. This Greek competition is not only a social activity with entertainment and talent — the proceeds go to benefit the Make a Wish Foundation.

"We usually sell out of tickets every year," said management sophomore Lana Wright, a Chi Omega and Greek Sing organizer. "This year we added on 300 extra tickets and even at that, we have less than 50 — if even that many — to sell before Saturday."

While the Chi Omegas

and Sigma Alpha Epsilons don't actually participate in the performance, almost every other sorority and fraternity does, with a presentation that lasts about five minutes.
