University helps up blood supply

By Stephen Trimble Contributing Writer

UK students have responded generously for calls to aid Central Kentucky's critically low blood supply this week, but more donors still are needed, Central Kentucky Blood Center spokeswoman Marsha Berry said yesterday.

"The most obvious reason (for the shortage) is the weather," Berry said, noting that icy streets have prevented many regular do-nors from venturing outside.

"We need 250 donors every day ... so when you have just a few days when only 50 people come out, you have a big prob-lem," she explained.

tem," she explained.

Berry said yesterday's blood drive at the Student Center was "very busy." Additional staff members had to be sent to assist the flow of donors. Students and faculty donated 78 pints of blood yesterday.

Across the region, donors gave more than 800 pints of blood both yesterday and Wednesday, which allowed a ban on elective surgery to be lifted earlier this week, Berry explained.

Audit reveals misuse

A University official resigned Wednesday, one day before an audit was released detailing sever-al misappropriations of funds from the Office of Residence Life.

Residence Life.

James Ploskonka, 31, associate director of Residence Life, turned in a letter of resignation to James Kuder, vice chancelor for Student Affairs, on Tuesday. In the letter, Ploskonka offered to make restitution for any items or money found missing from funds in Residence Life accounts.

The audit shows that both Ploskonka and his former supervisor used University funds for Ploskonka's personal benefit — including purchase of a washer and dryer and a refrigerator. Ploskonka's former supervisor, Bob Clay, former director of Residence Life, killed himself Dec. 14 after the audit was initiated. The audit renormed that these

The audit reported that there were problems with a UK agency account in the Office of Residence Life. For such an account, the University serves as the caretaker of funds of a UK organization, although no state or federal funds are supposed to be involved.

The audit also reported funds were misappro-priated in the PRIDE (Promoting Responsibility in Damage Elimination) account, which was set up as an incentive program for University resi-dence halls.

All of the money in the PRIDE account came directly from fees paid by students who live in University residence halls. After repairs to the halls were paid for each semester, remaining PRIDE account funds were supposed to be used

Finally, the auditors said Residence Life administrators had taken too much authority when establishing and collecting some student fees. In the agency account fund, auditors learned that some of the money had come from extra fees that had been added in the past couple of years — one paid by sudents who wanted to use fitness equipment in Alumni Gym.

In fiscal year 1991-92, there was a total of $5.311 in the account. The amount jumped to $16.946 the following year, and funds from fall 1993 totaled $16.650.

The audit determined that fees paid by the so-

The audit determined that fees paid by the sorroity rushees were used incorrectly.

Women who rushed sororities in the fall semester were required pay a $15 fee that was turned over to Residence Life. The fees were supposed to be used to pay for front desk security during Rush Week because sorority rushees are permitted to live in residence halls one week before the halls are open to other students.

However, the desk workers' salaries were paid for with University funds, and the extra money was deposited into the agency account.

Misappropriations also were found in fees for the Wellness Program at Alumni Gym and in money raised during fall 1993 by Boyd Hall's Hauntel House for the campus United Way campaign.

Haunted House for the campus United may campaign.

Students who wanted to participate in the Wellness Program had to pay $15 each per semester for use for equipment in Alumni Gym. The audit report showed that $5,130 was collected from students. Only $3,475 in checks was deposited into the agency account. The remaining $1,655 in cash remains unaccounted for.

Dr. Spencer Tunner, director of University Health Services, said although the number of students seen in Student Health has dropped in the past few days, the service still is treating students with weather-related problems.

At least 18 accidents and injuries that could be weather related, four of which were deemed serious, have been reported to the Student Health Service since Tuesday, Turner said. The service has treated many lacerations and sprains. But these injuries are seen daily, regardless of the bad weather, Turner added.

As of Tuesday, the UK emergency room had treated at least 30 falls and seven weather inju-ries, usually frostbite, for people older than 15, Turner said.

Harding complained plot took too long, newspaper reports By Steve Wilstein Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Tonya Harding knew of the plot to attack Nancy Kerrigan and at one point complained it was taking too long to carry out, her bodyguard told The Oregonian newspaper in an interview published yesterday.

"You know, you need to stop screwing around with this and get it done," Shawn Eckardt quoted Harding as saying.

"Tonya categorically denies those allegations," said Harding's attor-ney, Dennis Rawlinson. "We be-lieve Mr. Eckardt's lack of credibil-ity is already well documented."

Eckardi also told the newspaper that Harding's ex-husband, Jeff Gil-looly, offered a $10,000 U.S. Figure Skating Association check as a bonus if the attack on Kerrigan was carried out immediately. Top figure skaters get financial aid from the sport's governing body.

The newspaper interview was published a day after Gillooly's ar-rest and the release of an affidavit from a sheriff's deputy implicating Harding in the Jan. 6 attack for the Inst time.

In the affidavit, which accompanied Gillooly's arrest warrant, Eckard claimed Harding made two phone calls to find out Kerrigan's practice schedule at a skating rink near Boston and later devised an alibi to explain the calls.

Eckardt; Gillooly; Shane Stant, the alleged "hit man" in the attack; and Derrick Smith, the alleged geta-way driver, have been charged with conspiring to injure Kerrigan. Harding has not been charged and has denied any involvement.

Eckardt told The Oregonian that he met with Gillooly several times to plan the attack. At one midnight meeting around Dec. 31, while Stant was in Boston seeking a chance to attack Kerrigan, they talked while Harding practiced at a rink, he said.

Checks and balances may have prevented allegations of misuse

EDITORIAL

Right now, an annual income of $28,500 would seem like a large sum of money to most students, but for former Associate Director of Residence Life Jim Ploskonka, it apparently wasn't enough. To make up for that, Ploskonka allegedly used student money earmarked to benefit residence halls for himself. This is not a case of a few office supplies being snatched by an employee who thinks that no one will notice or care. It would be difficult not to notice the washer and dryer, dishwasher, refrigerator and hundreds of dollars in smaller items that Ploskonka has been accused of purchasing with student money for his own use.

It is also difficult to imagine students not caring about their money being wasted so blatantly for the benefit of someone whom they have entrusted to serve them.

Ploskonka, in his letter of resignation this week, offered to make restitution for the funds he has been accused of misappropriating, but the damage to the University's officials already has been done. It has left a fog of mistrust surrounding University officials that won't be easily lifted.

The blame however does not rest entirely on Ploskonka, By not won't be easily lifted.

The blame, however, does not rest entirely on Ploskonka. By not setting up a system of checks and balances that would be appropriate for the handling of such large sums of money, the University has created an atmosphere that makes Ploskonka's alleged misdeeds more likely to happen, not to mention much easier to perform.

The best way administrators can go about restoring the trust of the University community is by continuing what they are already doing on this case — pursuing it to the fullest extent, demonstrat-ing that the fee money students pay to UK is important and worth keeping an eye on.

Politics motivate push for special prosecutor

President Clinton had little choice in his decision to go along choice in his decision to go along with the appointment of a special prosecutor to investigate the Whitewater affair. Too much is fishy for this investigation to be conducted by the Department of Instice.

First, it was the suicide of Vin-cent Foster, a White House aide cent Foster, a White House aide and Clinton's formal personal at-torney. When the media found out that Hillary Clinton had the Whitewater file removed from Foster's office shortly after his suicide, lights went off in more than a few reporters' heads.

Add to that Clinton's White-

Whitewater was the name of the Clinton's failed real estate investment with business parmer James McDongal. Recently, it has become the catch phrase for a largely unarticulated web of suspicious about possible wrongdoing by Clinton.

Although recent media reports have stressed the possibility that Clinton may have broken campaign finance laws during his property used his influence as governor to keep McDongal's failing savings and loan afloat, no evidence has been gathered to substantiate either charge.

Even more precarious for Clinton, no one has publicly accused him of breaking specufic laws. Media speculation raises the public's suspicious, but Clinton is unable to respond to specific allegations because there are no specific allegations. Clinton constantly is receiving specific allegations.

Clinton constantly is receiving fire from the media over White-water but is left without a target at which he can fire back.
Given this context, Clinton made the right choice to go along with the appointment of a special prosecutor. He must convince the public he has nothing to hide.
With Reno's appointment Wednesday of a special prosecutor with Republican ties, the public's demands for an objective pursuit of the truth should at least temporarily subside.

But special prosecutors have nothing to do with an "objective pursuit of ruth." They have everything to do with power politics, in a system where scandal is a trump card for the president's opponents.

For example, what does Clinton's most formidable opponent, Sen. Bob Dole, think of special prosecutors?

It depends on when you ask him. In 1992 Dole helped defeat a Congressional special prosecutor Larry Walsh, who was appointed to investigate the Iran-Contra scandal, was harassing then-President George Bush.

Even if the investigation does not produce evidence that in-flates Whitewater to Watergate proportions, it will at least slow down Clinton's domestic agach, which includes both health care and welfare reform in the store and welfare reform in the simportant initiatives are Republican victories.

Only the titizen would claim that our legislators make decisions based on "principles." Rather, decisions made by public officials are often driven by personal or political considerations that are simply not germane to the issue at hand.

Father's father only leaves memory of okra

Before this summer, I only had a few vague memories about my paternal grandparents. Sometimes I forgot they even existed, which didn't exactly advance my under-standing of human sexuality.

standing of human sexually.

For a while, I was perfectly content to believe that my mother had a mommy and a daddy, just like I had a mommy and a daddy, and my father was manufactured from discarded machine parts. Or spontaneously generated. Or sporang fully-formed from the hip of Zeus. Whatever.

I knew he had arrived here somehow — to guide me, teach me, lecture me on why it's not a very good idea to microwave my teddy bear, and that's all I needed

It really didn't bother me one way or the other how he got here, so I clung to my own theories about how daddies are made until someone came up with something more plausible. Why ask needless measurements questions? My sister, who is five years old-er than I am, had a pretty fair rec-ollection of them; I was too young when they stopped talking to us for anything to register. The only concrete memory I had of these shadowy figures was okra. My grandfather loved, and still loves, to eat okra.

It is a hideous, hideous vegeta ble. It does make a lovely Christ mas tree ornament, sure, especial gest the stuff.

And that was all. That was the only proof that these hallucinations even existed. I firmly believe that, if he had known that his grandson's only memories adout him were of reeling away from a smelly clump of okra in nauseating horror, he would've him in my life. It didn't bother me all that much.

If I cut my losses right then and there — blocked him out, pretended he didn't exist — then I wouldn't have to hurt when he

Some day in the distant future, my dad would sit down at the dinner table, tell us that his father (or mother) was dead, and I'd do my very best not to be insensitive. But let's face it: Nobody cries for a stranger. You can't miss something you never had.

I was perfectly content to believe that my mother had a mommy and a daddy, ... and my father was manufactured from discarded machine parts. Or spontaneously generated. Or sprang fully-formed from the hip of Zeus.

tried to get back in touch with us much sooner. Who wants to leave a legacy like that?

When my dad told me that his dad wanted to see me, I was understandably curious. Seeing him would, once and for all, shatter that theory of mine about discarded machine parts, which no one had ever disproved to my satisfaction.

was a good reason that I hadn't had contact with him for 12 years. And what good would it do me to meet him now? I'd long since got-ten used to the idea of not having

I decided I had to go see what they were all about, so I walked the quarter-mile or so that separ-ates our two houses and stopped at the curb. I stood there for a few the curb. I stood there for a few minutes, staring at the place as if it were Castle Dracula. A modest, one-story Castle Dracula with a quaint vegetable garden in the back, but it was no less intimidatcan barely remember what I was doing two weekends ago, much less what I was doing when I was 11.

What was fresh news to him was long since forgotten to me (or purposefully blocked out — my entire middle school career, for instance). I told him "I don't remember" so many times that he probably thought I was an idiot.

ably thought I was an idiot.

Not to make light of it, but it somehow seems appropriate that I finally got to know my other grandfather only months before Mr. Fry passed on.

Mr. Fry passed on.

Mr. Fry was, for all intents and purposes, my replacement grandfather. I was short one, and he seemed to be qualified, so I waived the blood-relation requirement and recruited him for emergency duty. gency duty.

He was cantankerous, like I knew all grandfathers were supposed to be. He was practically as deaf as a post, which I knew a lot of grandfathers were. He gave me inappropriately large amounts of money whenever he came by, which all grandfathers do.

One goes down, and another springs up to take his place. That's ince. It's kind of like having a really good bench. Now we'll just have to see how the replacement—well, the replacement for the replacement — works out.

Cramming won't pack in much knowledge

This is my third semester at UK, and I'm trying to break a bad habit — cramming for tests. The stress and strain is burning mo out. I have a vague idea of things I can do to review for exams, but I need help with specific techniques to give me a sense of direction. There has to be a better way than those all-nighters. Any suggestions?

Sleepy Sophomore

Yes, there is a better way. You have taken the first step to break your habit — expressing a strong desire to change. Your motivation is a key factor in your academic success. Before you sart brewing that gallon of coffee, let's take a closer look at how to review for exams.

"Cramming," according to Webster, is defined as: "1.) To eat greedily, 2.) To pack in tightly; jam, 3.) To study rapidly under pressure for an exam." Although any of these definitions could provide interesting topics of discussion, let's take a closer look at No. 3.

look at No. 3.

Cramming for a test is analogous to taking a drug to feel better. It may seem to have a positive short-term effect (short-term memory recall), but the long term effects can be very detrimental (a perpetuation of poor study skills and habits; health problems because of siress; and lack of true learning).

Many students find it difficult not to cram. An important factor to realize is that cramming is a learned habit. Generally, we rely on cramming to compensate for various inreflective habits that we have assimilated, such as poor time management, inefficient study techniques and negative attitudes.

Let's take a look at a few exam review habits that, if used, could prove very beneficial:

•Time management — Organi zation and planning will make that big test seem a little less for midable.

Create an academic calenda with all exam dates marked. Thi is a crucial first step in formulating a more detailed schedule.

Determine the scope of the test-ing material and subdivide it into smaller sections.

Plan two hours of study for every hour of class. Break up these sessions with short breaks every 30-45 minutes to aid con-centration.

schedule to compensate for more difficult classes.

Get an early start and plan now or that next exam. This is one roven way to reduce test anxiety. *Study techniques — Here are a few techniques that work if you use them.

Find a quiet, convenient study area free from distractions. It is advisable not to study at home.

Review the entire scope of the material to be learned and then break it down into small parts. Whole-to-part learning aids in retention of material.

rhymes or acronyms, and creative associations to aid the memory Create practice tests to better synthesize the material and to build confidence. Anticipate prob-able questions and prepare sample problems to solve.

Use mnemonic devices, such as Create review tools such as summary sheets or flash cards. Summarize your readings or notes and teach someone else what you have learned. Sometimes we can learn best by teaching.

Form a study group of four or five people and agree to meet to brainstorm possible test questions and problems. If socializing is kept to a minimum, this is a great way to study for a test.

goals and focus them intensely.
This process provides the fuel for your motivation.

Feeling guilty about the past or worrying about the future steals your concentration and attention away from the only thing you can control — the present moment.

Use positive affirmations and self-talk every day. Attitude comes from expectations. Expect to do great.

Keep the test in perspective. Don't equate the test score with your self-esteem. "F" is for feed-back, not failure.

So, Sleepy Sophomore, work on these skills. They are simple, but not easy to acquire because of a tendency to resist change and hold on to old habits. The chance of obtaining a profitable return, as well as a few nights of sleep, is dramatically increased as you use these techniques.

If you are interested in learning more about these topics, you may wish to see an academic counselor in the Learning Skills program or consider enrolling in the Master Student program.

This 12-hour non-credit class is designed to help students achieve academic success. Major class topics include motivation, time management, concentration, reading skills, note taking, memory, test taking strategies and academic resources. It is a great investment in your academic further to success. Students who wish to address.

Students who wish to address these issues may come by the UK Counseling and Testing Center, 301 Frazee Hall or call 257-8701.

Record low temperatures re dered salt and chemicals useles state transportation officials said.

The ban was lifted Wednesday night for Interstate 64 east of Lex-ington and 1-65 from Elizabeth-town to the Tennessee border.

Also reopened was a four-mile stretch of I-24.

The rest of I-24 reopened today, as did I-71 linking Louisville with northern Kentucky, but traffic was limited to a single lane in each direction and a 40 mph speed limit.

Audit

Boyd Hall's annual Hallowen Haunted House collected about $1,000 in cash in October 1993. The funds never were deposited in any account, the audit reported. However, $1,050 was paid to the United Way from the agency ac-count through a voucher approved by Clay.

Auditors have been unable to de-termine what happened to the ap-proximately $1,000 in cash.

proximately $1,000 in cash.

Using the two accounts, Ploskonka purchased various items during the past 18 months, including major appliances, general household goods, a notebook computer and a videocassette recorder.

Many of the items were found at Ploskonka's residence in Lancaster, Ky., where he has lived since June. Others, including power tools and stereo equipment, were found in various residence halls.

Ploskonka previously lived in Kirwan Tower.

Ploskonka, who came to UK in 1988, told the auditors he used UK accounts to purchase a $125 ceiling fan and a $288 camera and bag.

fan and a $288 camera and bag.

Late last year, he also purchased a washer and dryer for $1,066, a re-frigerator for $1,629 and a $469 dishwasher, all for his personal use. Ploskonka returned the washer, dryer and refrigerator to UK after he learned that the whereabouts of the timens was being questioned by auditors, the report said.

The report also shows that Ploskonka charged an $859 electric range, which is located in his home, to the agency account.

On Dec. 18, however, Ploskonka and one of his attorneys went to Pierrat's, where he purchased the range, and had the billing changed to his name.

In addition, many smaller personal items were stored in Ploskonka's home.

Ploskonka told the auditors that he had returned several of the items he had purchased to the University and that he was under the impression that UK was compensating him $500 per month to supplement

"It was Mr. Ploskonka's understanding that this arrangement would continue until he received ... a higher salary," the report said.
Kuder said no such arrangement was authorized.
Ploskonka was able to buy many of the items because Clay apparently had given him permission to sign for items purchased through the accounts.

All such authorizations must be kept on file in the UK Controller's office, but auditors found only records authorizing Clay to sign on the accounts. According to the audit, Clay had never filed with the office to give Ploskonka signature authority.

Clay was in control of all Residence Life accounts and exercised final decision-making authority on these accounts, the report said.

Kuder told the auditors that he only reviewed the income and expenditures once a year, during a budget meeting, and that Clay never indicated to him there were any problems with the account.

sponsored by Farmhouse social fra-ternity and Alpha Delta Pi social sorority, said organizer Chad Sulli-van. Surprised blood center workers had predicted just 50 would turn out for the Tuesday blood drive.

Despite the high turnout at blood drives this week, Berry warned that the center still needs more blood — especially since the ban has been lifted.

At least 150 pints are used each day for transfusions, Berry said, which means the center must collect at least 400 pints for officials to "sleep safely this weekend."

versity Relations, said both Kuder and Chancellor for the Lexington Campus Robert Hemenway recived a copy of the audit.

He said they will have 30 days to recommend ways in which they can conform to the auditor's suggestions, which included ensuring the accounts meet University regulations and reviewing the appropriations and reviewing the appropriations and reviewing the the conclusions and recommendations and will implement (the recommendations)," Burch said.

The UK police will also receive a copy of the report and will study it to see if they want to open an investigation. Burch said this is normal procedure in an University audit.

If the police decide to open an investigation and if they find enough evidence, they may obtain warrants and seek a grand jury indictments of those involved in the alleged improprieties.

or those involved in the alleged im-proprieties.

Ploskonka was unavailable for comment last night. Kuder, reached at his office, would not comment on the situation.
