PREFACE

This check list of Wyoming imprints for the period 1866-1890 inclusive is the eighteenth in the numbered series of check lists issued by the American Imprints Inventory, and the first in that series to present without research the products of the press of a given state as reported by the workers in the field, from library catalogs, or from examination of the books themselves, in libraries and other depositories. By reducing to a minimum time spent in research and detailed description, the national office in Washington hopes to make possible the rapid completion and publication of many check lists, during the next few months. It should be distinctly understood that these check lists are not to be regarded as finished bibliographies but simply as preliminary lists prepared by the central office of the American Imprints Inventory and by editorial staffs of the American Imprints Inventory in the states to apprise scholars of the existence of a file which records and locates more than a million books, pamphlets and broadsides printed within the United States, from the beginning of printing through 1876 (1890 for certain western states, where the press was introduced at a relatively late date). Many of these have never appeared in any published bibliography.

At the time this preliminary list was compiled the field work in the state of Wyoming was scarcely half completed and the two richest depositories for Wyoming imprints within our date limits, the State Library and the University of Wyoming Library, were only about one fourth inventoried. Later, when the records are more complete it is hoped that the Wyoming state office will join the ranks of states editing their own imprints and compile a definitive bibliography which will correct the inaccuracies and fill the gaps that are bound to occur in editing a list under present limitations.

The first item in the check list, a Dictionary of the Sioux Language; "Compiled with the aid of Charles Guerreu, Indian interpreter, by Lieuts. J. K. Hyer and W. S. Starring, U.S.A. ... Fort Laramie, Dakota; December, 1866.," needs further investigation, but it is thought that it was printed, as well as compiled, in Fort Laramie. Of the copies reported as original editions, only the copy in the Newberry Library has been examined. The Library of Congress and the Wyoming State Library report reprints.

This fort was the first permanent settlement in the territory that is now Wyoming. Established in June, 1834 by Robert Campbell and William Sublette, it was purchased by the American Fur Company and became the great way station on the principal road to the far West. Later, in 1854 and 1856, it was the headquarters for the military campaigns against the Indians. Soldiers were stationed there until 1890 when the government sold the property. The state obtained title to it and in 1938 transferred it to the National Park Service.

Coutant, the Wyoming historian, says: "Other states have histories that simply relate to events which are a part only of their occupation and settlement; while Wyoming was the highway where converged all roads leading across the plains to the territories beyond. This made our state the theatre of bloody wars from the time of the discovery of South Pass, for more than 70 years. Our mountain passes afforded opportunities for ambush suited to the character of the savage tribes who disputed the passage of white men through the country. This holds good from the earliest record of trappers and traders down through the emigrant days, the building of the railroad, and only ended when the government succeeded in crushing the red warriors."

The first American explorer to enter Wyoming was John Colter, hunter and woodsman, renowned as the discoverer of the region now known as Yellowstone National Park. A member of the Lewis and Clark expedition, he asked for a discharge at Fort Mandan (on the homeward journey) and returned to the Wyoming country in 1807. Because he was not employed by the government and had no scientific outfit his travels and discoveries were given no official recognition.

The first expedition that crossed Wyoming from East to West was that of the overland Astorians in 1811, conducted by Wilson Price Hunt of the Pacific Fur Company. Starting from St. Louis in the attempt to discover a central land route to the Oregon country, it resulted in the founding of Astoria and the discovery of South Pass, the most important gateway through the Rocky Mountains between the Missouri River and the headwaters of the Columbia. Washington Irving's Astoria still remains the classic account of this overland expedition.

Next, from St. Louis, in 1824, came General William H. Ashley of the North American Fur Company with 300 men to explore the Sweetwater and Green rivers, in his company such colorful figures as Jim Bridger, the Sublettes and Jim Beckwourth. Eight years later Captain Bonneville, leading his caravan of 20 wagons and 100 men, demonstrated that wheeled vehicles could be taken over the mountain passes - for Wyoming the most important achievement of the expedition. In 1842, guided by Kit Carson, General John Charles Fremont began, under the authority of the government, the exploration of an overland route to the Pacific Ocean. Then came the missionaries, for by this time the Oregon Trail had become the great highway across Wyoming: "for Whitman who led a thousand settlers with 200 wagons over the trail to Oregon in 1843; for Brigham Young who led a party of Mormons over the trail in 1847; for those who participated in the gold rush to California in 1849 and after." Few of these, however, were interested in the colonization and development of Wyoming. It is remarkable that a section of the country more traveled over than any other between the great plains and the Pacific Ocean should have remained unsettled for nearly half a century, the only white men there being traders and military men.

The first permanent settlement at Fort Laramie in 1834, mentioned above, was followed by a second at Fort Bridger. Established as a fur trading post by Jim Bridger in 1842, and purchased in 1853 by a Mormon named Robinson, quartermaster general of the Utah militia, it was for a time the center of Mormon activity. In 1857, however, the struggle between the local government and the United States reached a crisis and the Mormons fled westward, burning their homes. Fort Bridger was rebuilt and became a military base in the fall of 1857, housing troops until 1878. During the building of the Union Pacific Railway in 1867 and 1868 five companies of regulars were stationed here to protect the surveyors and construction crews from the depredations of the Indians.

The first known use of the press in what is now Wyoming was made at Fort Bridger. Here was published the Daily Telegraph, the one surviving copy of which, the eighth number of the first volume, dated "Fort Bridger, U.T. June 26, 1863" is reproduced in Pioneer printing in Wyoming, by Douglas C. McMurtrie, (Cheyenne, 1933), reprinted from Annals of Wyoming, January, 1933. H. Brundage, listed as "proprietor," was probably printer as well - the first printer of Wyoming. Except for one line giving the price of gold at New York, the two columns of this diminutive newspaper, printed on one side only of a sheet 6-1/2 by 10-1/2 inches in size, are taken up entirely with news of the war between the states. It may be noted that while Wyoming was the last state in the Union to set up the printing press it is apparently the only state that can boast of a daily for its pioneer paper. That Wyoming might have been able to report the establishment of a press some four years earlier, had not William N. Byers, who became the pioneer printer of Denver, altered his original plans, would seem to be indicated by the following excerpt from the Nebraska Advertiser (Brownville, Nebraska) of March 24, 1859:

"Rocky Mountain News.-- The New's train started for Fort Laramie on the 8th inst., under the charge of W. N. Byers, who is named as the editor and proprietor. The first numbers will be issued probably at Fort Laramie, whilst a permanent location is sought after. It will most likely be the nucleus around which a new town will suddenly spring into existence in the neighborhood of the Cheyenne Pass of the Mountains, on the great leading thoroughfare by the way of Bridger's Pass, from the Platte river to Utah."

The whole story, an interesting one, must be reserved for the Colorado check list.

Practically all presses in Wyoming before 1891 were newspaper presses and since a full account of their rise and fall, or continuance, has been given in McMurtrie's sixteen-page pamphlet cited above, only those represented by imprints in this list will be mentioned here. With the coming of the Union Pacific Railway, the colonization and development of Wyoming began in earnest. Cheyenne was laid out in July 1867, and in September Nathan A. Baker and James E. Gates established the Cheyenne Leader. Two other newspapers began publication that same year, the Daily Argus, by L. L. Bedell & Company, in October, and the Star by O. T. B. Williams, in December. The Star lasted about a year, and the Argus about two years - long enough to print, late in 1869, Governor Campbell's message to the first Legislative Assembly of the Territory, No. 4 in the check list. Wyoming Territory, with boundaries as they exist today, was created July 25, 1868, The eastern part was set off from Dakota Territory, to which it had belonged, and the western portion was taken from Idaho and Utah. The government was not formed until April, 1869. Cheyenne was named the territorial capital and the first territorial legislature convened there October 12, 1869, and the right to vote and hold office was granted to women on equal terms with men by an act approved December 10, 1869.

Of the 168 items in the check list 122 are known to have been printed in Cheyenne, chiefly by the Leader and the Sun, which was brought from Laramie and eventually merged with the Leader which exists today in combination with the Wyoming Tribune, begun in Cheyenne in 1884. Printing began at Laramie in April, 1868 with the arrival of the Frontier Index. The Freeman brothers of Virginia were the proprietors of this migratory journal, known as the "Press on Wheels," which, operating within the boundaries of at least four states, was most closely connected with Wyoming during the building of the Union Pacific Railroad. Constantly moving westward, the outfit was hauled in a wagon from terminal to terminal, probably in advance of railway construction - Cheyenne, Fort Sanders, Laramie City, Green River City, and finally to Bear River City in the southwestern corner of Wyoming where its peregrinations ended. The last issue located is that of November 17, 1868. Shortly afterwards the entire plant was destroyed in the Bear River riot of 1868 - a protest against the paper's stand for law and order. The only known book imprint that can be credited to this press in Wyoming is No. 2 in the check list: A Vocabulary of the Snake, or, Sho-Sho-Nay Dialect, by Joseph A. Gebow, interpreter. This was a second edition, revised and improved in January, 1864, and printed at "Green River City, Wg. Ter.: Freeman & Bro., Book and Job Printers. 1868." It was at Green River City that the imprint was changed from "Dakota Territory" to "Wyoming Territory" as the result of the act of Congress creating the new territory.

Returning to Laramie, it was almost a year after the departure of the Frontier Index in July, 1868, before Nathan A. Baker established the Laramie Daily Sentinel in May, 1869. Edgar Wilson Nye, better known as Bill Nye, coming to Laramie from Wisconsin in 1876, became city editor of the Sentinel. In 1881, Wyoming's most famous paper, the Laramie Daily Boomerang (named for Nye's pet mule) was established by Nye's friends, as a Republican mouthpiece, and also to give Nye an opportunity to develop a national humorous weekly, for already his characteristic writings had attracted nationwide attention. Nye left Laramie, however, in 1883 to accept a position on the New York World and the Boomerang was continued as a general paper until 1924, when in combination with the Republican, established in 1890, it became the Republican and Boomerang. These three Laramie presses are all represented by imprints in the list - 22 items in all. The three remaining presses represented are those established by the Buffalo Echo, the Lusk Herald, and the Rawlins Tribune, four imprints between the years 1886 and 1890, the final year of the check list, and the year, July 10, 1890, that Wyoming entered the Union, the forty-fourth state in order of admission. The items included without imprint were probably printed in Cheyenne or Laramie.

An analysis of the 168 items will be of interest: State documents account for 73, municipal documents 8, trials 44, fraternal (Freemasons 18, Knights of Pythias 1) 19. The remaining 24 items are divided among subject groups as follows: Agriculture and live stock 5, churches 2, directories and guide books 4, fiction and music 4, Indians 5, investments 1, mines and minerals 3.

Emphasizing again the incompleteness of the present list, we ask that note of any new titles, corrections, or additional locations be sent to the central office of the American Imprints Inventory, 433 East Erie Street, Chicago, Illinois, for use in compiling an exhaustive list at some future date.

We wish to acknowledge with appreciation the courtesy of Mrs. Gladys F. Riley, Librarian of the Wyoming State Library in checking the list against the holdings of that library, not for additional titles at this time, but simply to be quite certain that the State Library is credited with all the titles in the list that are to be found there. We are grateful also to Mrs. Riley and to Miss Mary E. Marks, Librarian of the University of Wyoming Library, for clearing up certain matters in connection with some of the documents listed.

This check list, compiled by Mrs. Winifred Schlosser of the editorial staff of the American Imprints Inventory of the Historical Records Survey, has been mimeographed by the Illinois Historical Records Survey, under the direction of Mr. Thomas R. Hall, State Director.
