The Intelligencer of Tuesday informs its readers that the government has thrown the laborers out of employment at New York, and speaks of starvation being the consequence. If the lazy rascals were disposed to work, we should think there would be no great danger of their starving. The New York Advocate and Journal of the 18th states that there is an agent in that city, who will pay the passage and $20 per month, to laborers to work on the Illinois and Michigan Canal. If they choose to starve rather than to embrace such an offer, we have little commiseration for them.
