Trims request by 40% Carroll recommends cuts in UK budget

By PEGGY CALDWELL

FRANKFORT—Gov. Julian Carroll recommended Wednesday that UK's request for state funds for the 1976-78 biennium be cut by $18.7 million.

Carroll announced his proposal at a morning press briefing he held to explain his top priorities in the $5.7 billion state budget recommendation.

UK's original request for state funding exceeded $199 million for the two-year period beginning July 1976. Last November the proposal was forwarded to the Council on Public Higher Education. The council recommended that an additional $33 million be allocated to the University.

Carroll, however, said he trimmed approximately 40 per cent off the council's recommended increases for Kentucky's eight institutions of higher education. The Public Higher Education Summary, which appears in the Kentucky Executive Budget 1976-1978 (Carroll's budget document), shows the council's recommendation for UK's biennial increase was cut by about 45 per cent.

Carroll's major economizing recommendation for the University came in the area of instruction. He proposed to pare $14.1 million from the $96.7 million instructional allotment recommended by the council.

He also expressed dissatisfaction with the manner in which the council presented its recommendations. He said he had asked the council to prioritize all recommended funding.

"I strongly resented the council's implication that they had the duty and the right to estimate Kentucky revenues and to allocate what to spend. We will find under the constitution and statutes, that it is up to the Department of Finance."

Throughout his discussion of higher education priorities, Carroll repeatedly urged "full funding" for the University of Louisville. He said "full funding" was defined by consultation with U of L officials.

He said he plans to allot $4.2 million to reduce in-state U of L tuition $100 each year of the biennium. The reductions, he said, would put U of L's tuition fee within $100 of parity with other state universities by 1978.

But, Carroll said, "I feel compelled to ask the council, in the next few years, to evaluate tuition rates at all state universities."

Carroll also asked if there is a need to limit the number of students enrolling in graduate and professional schools, excluding medical and dental schools.

"Can the marketplace absorb as many doctoral and master candidates as we are educating? At present, it is a drain on the Commonwealth," he said.

To further his goal of economic efficiency in higher education, Carroll proposed a programmatic approach to designing and construction university and college buildings. He has designated $70 million for capital construction projects.

"Money for structures will only be appropriated after programmatic features are identified" by the council, he said.

The governor has already earmarked $15 million for capital construction projects for community colleges. The only UK-Lexington project under consideration at this time is a primary care and research center.

Several other projects from the eight institutions are in competition for a limited amount of money, which Carroll said will be "even tighter if Congress doesn't come through" with an anticipated $46 million in revenue sharing over the biennium.

Also with regard to public higher education, Carroll has formulated plans concerning the following:

—$2.6 million to increase the number of new primary care residencies to be distributed evenly between UK and U of L.
—$9 million to upgrade faculty salaries at regional institutions and community colleges.

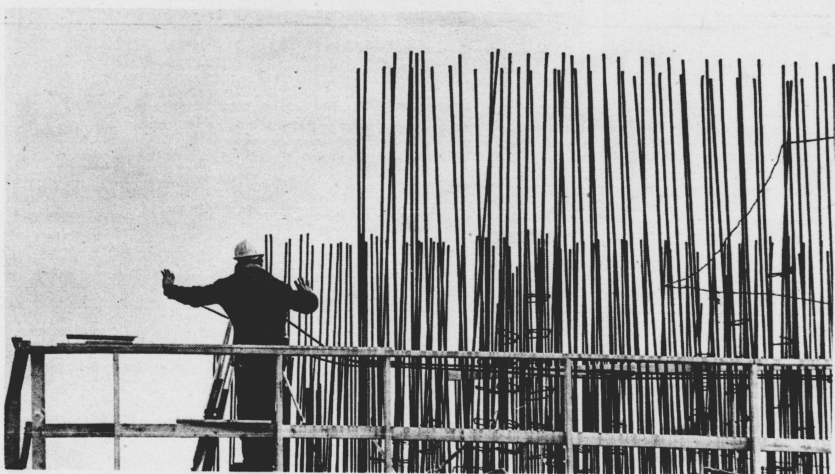

—University designation for Northern Kentucky State College.

—$1 million to correct accreditation deficiencies at UK, U of L and Western Kentucky University.

—$5.5 million for state student grant and loan programs.

"There is a reduction in total funds for higher education and a higher amount to total funds for elementary and secondary education," Carroll said. He had said earlier in the briefings that these had long been two of his major concerns.

Carroll's budget proposal was presented to a joint session of the General Assembly Wednesday night. The governor's budget request will now move into the House and Senate Appropriations and Revenue Committees for recommendations before it is returned to the floors for final adoption.

If a group of local bar operators have their way, bars will be allowed to remain open until 2 a.m. instead of "herding groups of people out" at the customary 1 a.m. closing time.

"We would like to have the option to stay open" for an additional hour, said Alan M. Stein, manager of the 803 South (Broadway) bar.

"It's something we've (local bar operators) been working on for some time," said Stein, who four months ago banded together with 14 other bar managers to form the Blugrass Beverage Association, Inc., (BBAI).

Stein said the BBAI has been working with the Chamber of Commerce, the Lexington Center Corp., the Mayor's office and the Tourism Commission in order to extend local drinking hours.

"The Alcoholic Beverage Control (ABC) office (of the Urban County Government) has been extremely cooperative in this matter," Stein said. "If drinking hours are extended, Driesler (Stephen D. Driesler, ABC administrator) should be commended."

Before local bars can remain open until 2 a.m., the Urban County Council must grant approval for the extended hours, said Driesler Wednesday morning. "I plan to recommend the extension at a council meeting in March."

The acting president of the BBAI, Gary Stingle, said, "We've got to remain in the limelight," in order to get the extended hours passed by the government.

Extending the bar hours "will help the convention trade, but it will stir up the religious community," Stingle said, adding that he "understands how the conservative people in the town feel" about extended hours.

Driesler indicated, however, that other segments of the Lexington population would favor extended bar hours.

"Lexington has become an urban metropolitan area, and 1 a.m. closing time is unrealistic."

From the law enforcement standpoint, the present 1 a.m. closing time is producing more problems than it's

Council to hear new parking plan

By Daniel Rowland

A new answer to the vexed question of Lexington Center parking has been drawn up by Lexington architect Lynn Cravens and will be presented to the Urban County Council tonight. The plan, involves the development of some 34 acres of L & N Railroad land immediately to the west of the civic center by a private developer to provide at least 1,400 additional parking spaces connected to the civic center by a shuttle trolley system. In addition, the old warehouse structures next to the center would be renovated and turned into a shopping and entertainment area in the style of Underground Atlanta, while the air rights above the parking area would be developed for further commercial uses. At the far end of the property, across the proposed Newtown Pike Extension, would be a housing development, which would reinforce the residential character of beleaguered Irishtown and Davistown.

As someone who has actively opposed the current civic center parking plan throughout much of the fall, I feel that the Cravens Plan is at long last a creative and effective solution to the problem. For the city, it provides 2,350 spaces (1,400 plus 950 in the South Hill on land already acquired) with no further land acquisition costs, no parking structure, no necessity of issuing any further municipally guaranteed bonds, no relocation payments or problems (relocation is almost impossible since there is virtually no vacant low-cost housing in Lexington) and no litigation costs. It is by far the cheapest of any solution proposed so far.

For the civic center, the plan provides the most likely means of securing the necessary parking before the center opens this October. The risks of further litigation, relocation delays, and continued political opposition would be avoided. In the long run the whole civic center development would become more attractive and more interesting, with a real identity of its own centered around the historic structures in the west of the center, instead of the plastic and anonymous atmosphere which seems to prevail in the present structure. This sense of place, reinforced by other historic areas of the downtown, has a real financial value to the civic center since it would be a magnet for shoppers and, especially, for conventioners.

Most important, the new plan not only will not destroy any further housing on the South Hill, the housing development at the west end of the L & N property will reinforce and complement existing residential patterns in the whole area. The proximity of the shops and entertainments of the center would improve the quality of life for South Hill residents, while the shuttle trolley will make these amenities available to residents of Irishtown and the new development. And in the process the center would create a reservoir of natural customers for itself within walking or trolley distance, thus providing revenue now, and some security against the very predictable future when energy is scarce and the automobile is used less often.

If you agree as I and several others do, including Councilwoman Pam Miller, that this plan has great promise, two things are crucial. First, come to the council meeting to see the details for yourself and, hopefully, support the Cravens Plan. The pressure on the council to settle the matter is intense and getting more intense all the time. Without your continued support this new plan will be dismissed. It must be made clear that the current (LCC) plan is an unacceptable option. Several visits to the council will probably be necessary.

But at the same time, some discretion is necessary for those who plan to speak. Several councilpersons have told me that the very favorable impression created by the presentation of signatures several weeks ago was almost obliterated in the minds of potential swing voters by the revolutionary rhetoric and personal attacks contained in some of the speeches that accompanied the petition. The accuracy of these speeches is beside the point. We must remember our audience. The vital concern of us all is to influence two groups, the Urban County Council and the LCC. These people are alienated from any proposal which is accompanied by rhetoric which is to them offensive. Such rhetoric is definitely counterproductive.

So, if you are at all interested in the fate of the South Hill, the civic center and downtown Lexington as a whole, please come to council meeting at the Municipal Building, 136 Walnut Street, Courthouse "C" at 7 p.m. tonight and be prepared to come again. Only the support of the whole community all generate enough pressure to keep the council from dismissing this plan. At the same time, be as positive and constructive as possible. See you there.

Daniel Rowland is a history professor and secretary of the Historic South Hill Neighborhood Association.

Letters

South Hill

Editor:

Two-hundred families of the South Hill area in Lexington are being forced out of their homes so that the city can build a parking lot. That's right, acres and acres of asphalt are to cover what is one of the most beautiful and historic communities in Lexington. Two-hundred families are being forced to look for homes during an acute housing shortage.

It just doesn't make sense. For less than 25 per cent more the city could build a parking structure and these families could keep their homes. But, for some mysterious reason, the downtown financial lords don't want that. They want to increase their property values, and that means residential areas must be destroyed.

The people of the South Hill area and their allies throughout Lexington are taking on the Urban County Government to force them to stop this meaningless destruction. There is a key meeting on Jan. 29, 7 p.m., in the Municipal Building, downtown. All supporters of the people of South Hill should attend this meeting.

There is another key aspect of this problem concerning us as students, which many people have overlooked. The University of Kentucky is one of the major collaborators in this plot of destruction. Without the support of UK administrators no homes would be destroyed. We as students must move to block the signing of any lease between the University and the Lexington Center Corporation as long as there is any plan for the destruction of the South Hill neighborhood.

More pressure

Editor:

For those who weren't there or don't know about it by now, the last Urban

County Council meeting dealing with South Hill saw a record-breaking crowd stuff themselves into the council chambers and put on the heat. Two-hundred vocal people presented a petition with over 8,000 signatures. As a result of this pressure the council was induced to schedule a special session on the issue (originally scheduled for Wednesday night but rescheduled for tonight). This evening's meeting promises to be even livelier than the last one. We have a larger hall than before, and it is crucial that once again we fill it to overflowing. Last time we made them sweat; this time we must make them act.

The planned destruction of the Pleasant Green-South Hill neighborhood concerns more people than those hundreds now threatened with loss of their homes. In a city already burdened with a critical housing shortage, the destruction of more housing benefits no one but the slumlords whose rents it raises. Most distressing of all is the growing realization that the leveling of South Hill is merely one step in a continuing process of urban "revitalization" which promises wholesale destruction of residential neighborhoods downtown to make room for more parking lots, super highways and large commercial development.

Only an aroused public can put a halt to these plans. Come to the meeting tonight; bring your friends with you. If you feel you already know enough, come prepared to express your views. If not, come anyway—you may find it very educational.

The meeting is on the second floor of the Municipal Building, 136 Walnut St. at 7 p.m.

Senate defeats bill; fails to regulate GSA

By STEVE BALLINGER
Kernel Staff Writer

A Student Government (SG) constitutional amendment revising the rules governing General Student Assemblies (GSA) was defeated Tuesday night when it won less than two-thirds of student senators' support.

Introduced last semester by former senator Cary Junkin, the amendment would have allowed any student with a petition of 200 signatures to call a GSA. The amendment also required a quorum of 1 per cent of the student body before the GSA could conduct business. Junkin is no longer a senator because he did not return to school this semester.

Although the bill passed unanimously in the final SG meeting last semester, senators were divided Tuesday over the quorum issue.

Jim Newberry, senator-at-large, said the idea of petitioning a GSA was a good feature, but said the SG constitution did not design GSAs to be representative of the student body. "They couldn't be representative unless everyone's there," Newberry said. He said an assembly of 1 per cent of the student body might still be controlled by special interest groups.

Stacie Meyer, education senator, said minority opinions would especially dominate non-quorum meetings. "I think it's (GSA) a farce and should be recognized as such."

As a constitutional amendment, the bill had to win a two-thirds vote at two consecutive regular meetings to become law.

Another issue debated Tuesday was funding for the Council on Women's Concerns (CWC). SG President Jim Harralson vetoed an earlier $300 no-strings-attached contribution and substituted a bill allocating the same amount to speakers, films, and publicity. The senate disagreed and overrode his veto 25-6, awarding $300 to CWC.

CWC chairwoman Sherry Allen told the senate her organization would not accept money with strings attached. Calling Harralson's bill "paternal," Allen listed several items in CWC's plans for which Harralson's bill would not allow payment. They included: books, office furnishing and supplies.

Steve Petrie, engineering senator, said Allen should provide titles of books, movies and the names of speakers before receiving money.

Charlie Masters, agriculture senator, said that the CWC, as a "charitable organization," should not be "too particular where the money's coming from."

Janet Patterson, business and economics senator, said she was "disgusted" with some of the arguments against funding the CWC.

Owners seek extension of drinking hours solving, said the ABC administrator.

As a result of Lexington's "increasing sophistication," with many people working until late in the evening hours, there is and will be "a market for late night drinking," he said.

"If people, who want to, can't drink legally after 1 a.m., then the doors for illegal activity have been opened," Driesler said. "When that happens, bars that are operating within the law will lose business to illegal operations, and governments will also lose tax revenues."

When Driesler goes before the Urban County Council, to recommend the one hour extension, he will also recommend that alcoholic beverage license holders be permitted to purchase an additional license, allowing them to remain open until 4 a.m.

Driesler said his recommendations, if adopted by the council, would put Lexington bar-keepers on equal footing with Louisville bar operators, who are now free to stay open until 4 a.m.

"When Louisville extended the operating hours (December, 1974), a rash of traffic accidents that had been occurring between midnight and 1:30 a.m., attributed to alcohol, decreased by 16 per cent," Driesler said, in reference to Louisville police statistics.

Driesler said Louisville's extension of bar hours had resulted in "people leaving bars in shifts, rather than being forced to leave at one time." With people leaving at intervals the accident rate in Louisville has declined, he said.

The Lexington Civic Center opening next fall is another reason for extending drinking hours, he said. "Convention delegates will be coming to Lexington who won't be used to the early closing hours."

Driesler said he plans to recommend a $300 fee be charged for the extended-hour license.

Journalist Harrison Salisbury takes cynical but optimistic American view

By RON MITCHELL
 Kernel Staff Writer

"Future events, whatever they may be, will not deprive the Americans of their climate or their inland seas, their great rivers or their exuberant soils. Nor will bad laws, revolutions and anarchy be able to obliterate that love of prosperity and spirit of enterprise which seems to be the distinctive characteristic of their race or extinguish altogether the knowledge that guides them on their way."

—De Tocqueville, 1835

Harrison Salisbury is a cynical 68-year-old journalist who has seen America and the world from every angle. He has covered racial demonstrations and killings in the South, witnessed brutal slayings and degeneracy in New York, traveled the farmlands of middle America and gone around the world more times than he can remember.

But now, Salisbury comes forth with a critical appraisal of America 200 years after its founding in a poignant and honest 22-page essay in the February issue of Esquire magazine. In "Travels Through America" the journalist concludes that De Tocqueville's analysis of this country 141 years ago remains true today.

Salisbury's project was financed and sponsored by the Xerox Corporation, leading many critics to surmise that his writing would portray a distorted picture of America in 1975 and project a complimentary view of major corporations. This was not to be.

It took Salisbury six months to research the article and without the corporation's support, he would not have been able to accomplish the project. Xerox had no editorial control over the article and it is obvious from reading it that Salisbury did not submit to the fact that a major duplicating company was footing the bill.

The actual journey begins with Salisbury retracing the lives of his ancestors in the New England area. This is made easier by the fact that one of his great-grandfathers chronicled his life and activities, listing his places of residence and occupations during the 1800's. Salisbury used this journal as a guide.

As he traveled through the small towns and villages where his ancestors once resided, Salisbury became dismayed at the changes which had taken place and was highly critical of the way Americans had raped their lands and large corporations had ruined the lakes and streams, all in the name of free enterprise.

series of interviews with both famous and average Americans.

He includes conversations with poet Robert Bly, progressive Minnesota Gov. Wendell Anderson, an 80-year-old cab driver in New York City, a Jesuit priest in mid-town Manhattan, degenerate author Hunter Thompson, Dan Ellsberg, political activist Tom Hayden and two black women who are movers and shakers in South Carolina and Alabama.

Among the half-dozen or so states Salisbury felt compelled to mention in "Travels through America," is Kentucky. He relates a conversation he had with a student at Danville's Centre College, a young man who

'he relates a conversation ...with a student at danville's centre college a young man who had supported ...nixon and was now contemplating becoming a communist.'

Salisbury criticizes the artifice which has overtaken the country —plastic marques, numerous junk-food outlets which dot most American cities—and concludes that much of this fakeness is part of the United States' desire for economic stability.

He decries the systematic placement of able-bodied persons in institutions because they have reached a certain age. "I do not know what we think we are doing. I know that it is very wrong, very wrong," Salisbury writes.

Salisbury, with a penchant for details, has no problem making the reader feel as if he or she is present with him on the journey. He presents a clear scenario of the towns and people he visits.

The Salisbury piece is quite unlike the other "Buycentennial" propaganda and hypocritical rhetoric that has been written to celebrate this country's 200th birthday.

Ending his travels through the Northeast, Salisbury leaves for California, where he begins a had supported Richard Nixon and was now contemplating becoming a Communist.

The article includes an interview with an elderly couple from Cape Cod who are pessimistic about the future of America. The man, who is 95, and his wife, who is 92, were among the first and most ardent opponents of the Vietnam War.

Salisbury succeeded in comparing the America of his ancestors to 1975 America, concluding that we are headed in the right direction.

He supports this conclusion by pointing out that young people have realized the basic hypocrisy within the social system that supports everyone's desire to be rich and successful.

Salisbury is convinced that the new breed of young people have the right idea by being individuals and living their lives the way they want, not the way they should.

Lady Kats basketball team eyes good things still to come

By DICK GABRIEL
Sports Editor

Women's basketball at UK seems to be right on the brink. The Lady Kats are on the verge of becoming one of the more powerful teams in the country, they've already come close to equal competition with nationally ranked teams, and they could be allotted money for scholarships in the near future.

The changes will be gradual, and will probably come in succession.

For the Lady Kats to be able to go head to head with top-notch teams, they will have to become a top-notch team, right? Head coach Sue Feamster thinks the only thing standing in the way is consistency.

"We have so much youth, we're very inconsistent," Feamster said. The Lady Kats sport a roster with eight freshmen, three sophomores, one junior and one senior. "It's hard to get any of them to perform with any consistency," she said.

There have, however, been a few bright spots in the Lady Kats' season, which now stands at 7-6. Pam Browning is one.

"We like to think of her as a potential All-American," Feamster said of the six-foot sophomore forward. "Last year, we played against five of the top 10 schools in the country and she averaged 17 points and 15 rebounds against them."

"Sally Bussell started slowly this year but now she's really coming on," said Feamster.

UK's women's basketball program caught the eye of Janet Timperman, who last year was the most highly sought after girl's basketball player in the state. "She hasn't been consistent, but this is still a learning experience for her," said Feamster.

Despite the overall youth incorporated into the squad, the Lady Kats have held their own against some of the top teams in the country. The team recently played in a tournament in Mississippi which hosted 16 of the best women's teams available. The Lady Kats finished seventh.

The season has been spotted with near misses and a few surprises as the Lady Kats whipped eighth-ranked Ohio State earlier this year; lost to Tennessee Tech, regional champions for the past four years, by only eight points in the season opener; nipped Marshall University 57-56; and lost to national JC champions Anderson Junior College by only eight points.

With all these close shaves, it's no wonder Feamster is optimistic. "We've beaten some real good teams," she said. "We feel like we've beaten ourselves in most of our losses."

Feamster also pointed out that UK, unlike other teams they play, offers no financial aid to its players.

"We have no financial aid in the form of scholarships," Feamster said. "Any aid for our players comes through the financial aid office, like it does for any other student."

According to Feamster, the new Title IX rule, which has forced many universities to dole out money to their women's athletic programs, should be a boon to the Lady Kats' cause.

"Higher educational institutions are supposed to be in compliance (with Title IX) within the next three years," Feamster said. "How soon we begin really depends on legislature, because we get our funds from the state. We're not under the athletic department."

Yet the Lady Kats are competitive, and draw over 500 students per game. "We don't get much publicity," she said. "We feel if the student body knew about us and came out to see us, they'd support us."

Looking to the future, the Lady Kats play Dayton this Friday night in Memorial Coliseum at 8 p.m.

The following weekend, it's on to Louisville for the Louisville Classic, a four-team tournament. UK will face Bellarmine, Louisville and Eastern in the two-day affair.

"Dayton was the runner-up in Ohio last year," Feamster said. "They have a real good center."

The Lady Kats are still hoping for the return of Debbie Mack, a freshman who is suffering from a severely sprained back, and Kathy Kessinger, a junior with much needed experience, who is out with ailing knees. The return of these two players should give Kentucky a good shot at the regional title, won by Eastern all four years of the region's existence.

"We're hoping since the tournament will be on our home floor we can pull it out, but Eastern's always tough," said Feamster.

"Do not lay up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust destroy, and where thieves break in and steal.
"But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust destroys, and where thieves do not break in or steal; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."
