Former UK football star Elmore Stephens was released from the Fayette County Jail Tuesday after posting bond.

Stephens, an All-American tight end on the 1974 Wildcat team, and two other men have been charged with the Oct. 11 alleged kidnaping and murder of Luron Eugene Taylor.

Also charged in the case are John Bishop, 22, and Robert Channels, 22. Stephens and Bishop are from Louisville and Channels is from Lexington. Bishop is a former UK football team manager.

Stephens was released about 6 p.m. after Circuit Judge Charles M. Tackett signed an order reducing bail for each of the three suspects from $200,000 to $50,000.

Bishop and Channels are expected to be released in the next few days, according to Henry Hughes, attorney for the three men.

Hughes said the bond was reduced because he, the prosecutor and the judge "thought the bail was unnaturally high."

"I personally think the bail was unnaturally high because of the notoriety given the case by the media and Lexington police," Hughes said. "Actually, the bail reduction just makes this case commensurate with other murder cases in Fayette County."

Hughes said his arguments in the bail reduction motion included evidence that $25,000 was the highest bond set in the last 11 murder cases before the Fayette Circuit Court.

Earlier Tuesday, Stephens, Bishop and Channels waived their preliminary hearings and were bound over to the Fayette County grand jury. Hughes said the hearing was waived to expedite the case to the higher Fayette Circuit Court.

Elmore Stephens, after posting bail which was reduced from $200,000 to $50,000, was released from Fayette County Jail about 6 p.m. Tuesday. Stephens is charged with the alleged kidnaping and murder of Luron Taylor.

Taylor, 24, was allegedly abducted from his apartment at 1261 Village Dr. around 11:30 p.m. Oct. 11 by four men. According to witnesses, one shot was fired and Taylor was forced into the trunk of the abductors' car.

Taylor's body was found 10 days later floating in the Ohio River near Louisville, about five miles east of the Jefferson County Police River Station. The Jefferson County coroner's office attributed Taylor's death to strangulation.

At the time of his abduction, Taylor was being sought by Lexington Metro Police for questioning in connection with an Oct. 11 afternoon robbery of Stephens and Channels at Channels' apartment, 1508 Yates Crescent Dr. Stephens and Channels reported to Metro Police that they were robbed of about $1,000 and a $500 watch.

It has been reported in Lexington newspapers that a large quantity of drugs was taken in the 3 p.m. robbery. However, there has been no official confirmation by the Metro Police or others investigating the case that drugs were involved.

Rodney Perkins, 24, of Lexington, was indicted by the Fayette County grand jury Monday in connection with the robbery. During testimony in Fayette Quarterly Court, Channels said the money and watch were the only items taken in the robbery.

Perkins remains jailed in lieu of $10,000 bond.

Stephens, Bishop and Channels were arrested Oct. 13 and originally charged with kidnaping. The additional murder charge was filed against each following the discovery of Taylor's body.

A fourth suspect, Noble Leroy Butler, 23, of Louisville, was arrested Oct. 18 and charged with kidnaping. The charge was dismissed earlier this month by the Fayette County grand jury and Butler was released.

The fourth suspect is still being sought by Metro Police, according to Joe Catt, Metro Police media liaison.

Jack Scott blasts college athletics; stays quiet about Patty Hearst

By WALTER HIXSON
Assistant Managing Editor

Remaining essentially mute about his alleged involvement with Patty Hearst, controversial sports figure Jack Scott advocated steps to rid college athletics of professionalism.

Speaking before about 500 persons at the Student Center Grand Ballroom Tuesday, Scott said college athletes are recruited for purposes of athletic rather than educational achievement. The former Oberlin College athletic director said collegiate athletics should be forced to "clean up their act."

Scott said aspiring professional athletes should not go to college "under the guise of students." He cited the case of Moses Malone, who bypassed college to sign a pro basketball contract with the Utah Stars. "It took a 17-year-old kid to figure out there's no need to put in four years of college to be a professional."

Scott quickly pointed out that he is not attempting to "destroy sports. People have to understand that I am making a distinction between athletes and management in professional sports."

Concerning alleged involvement with Hearst and the SLA, Scott said, "I have pledged non-collaboration (with the FBI) for the last eight months and can hardly change that now."

But Scott said two Rolling Stone articles purporting to have the "Inside Story" on the Hearst case were "reckless and vulturistic." He said the articles, which implicated Scott of harboring Symbionese Liberation Army (SLA) fugitives, made Rolling Stone "the National Enquirer for the counterculture."

Scott added that the stories were "a Clifford Irving-like attempt to con the American public." He said

Polliwogs

Dear Al:

Whaddya say, you old limpet-eater, you? I haven't seen or heard from you since we parted ways one fall afternoon on the Strip in Knoxville—damn, I was freezing my ears off and you were walking around wearing a T-shirt and saying: "You think this is cold? This isn't cold. This is like the middle of summer in Newark. I didn't even bring down a winter coat." And so on and so on. Right on, Al.

Anyway, my ol' brutha Steve told me about six months later that you had gone off to live in Oregon a few weeks after they passed that polliwog decriminalization law there (they made possession a $10 fine, right?), and that nobody had heard an utterance from you since then. What's the story, Al? Like it out there, boy?

Things are still about the same here in the polliwog department, except that now more Real People smoke it than students, and the police in the, uh, sophisticated cities don't make as many small busts as they used to. Although they still do it in small towns. Politics, y'know.

Al, since I last talked with you, other things have changed a lot. I got into law school, (and having been trying to get out ever since), have done a little travelling (despite varied and several gnashings of teeth at my lack of ambition to...work), and have completely laid off drinking whiskey without the aid of either some water or soda. Yes, many important changes have come over me, my son.

Nevertheless, we must all strive for the higher ideals in life. Like getting out of school. Doing some more traveling. Drinking scotch with either water or soda. We must be Renaissance Men, ever-climbing toward the heights and standards set for us by the angels of pre-primordial times. But ya gotta watch out for ulcers if you do that number, Al, my man, because it's a pretty heavy task. I wanna tell ya. Those old post-primordial instincts just tend to get us down sometimes, I guess.

But enough of this mish-mash! (Just put this down if it doesn't make any sense to you, Al. All I can really think about now is antitrust litigation anyway. Petitioner does not not double-not have standing to sue on this violaaaarrrggghhh!! Whew! I lost it there for a minute there, didn't I? Hmmm, gotta get off of this topic. Oh yeah, I got it, Al, I wanna tell ya about an idea I want to write about in this column that I have in the school newspaper; really I'm kinda scared to say anything about it, because it's still a real controversial subject in some people's minds around here, but what if it is, is...polliwogs. You know, that stuff that they practically legalized in Oregon (and in California and in Colorado and in Alaska and in Maine).

Well, I've been thinking for quite some time now that they should at least decriminalize it in Kentucky or maybe even (would I dare say it?) legalize, regulate, and tax it like alcohol. Why, I heard the other day that some economics prof at the University of Florida said that taxes for the stuff would bring in at least twice as much money per year as ol' Gerald Ford distributes in federal revenue sharing funds every 12 months. The Army sponsored a study that concluded that polliwogs had no detrimental effects not too long ago, and even the Courier-Journal has lately started talking about it as much as Johnny Carson has been in the past year. The National Institute on Drug Abuse says that an incredible number of people smoke now.

Where will it all end? In the moral breakdown of a nation? Uh-uh. In the continuation of laws that have become immoral themselves when enforced? Uh-huh, for a while at least. But I have a feeling that when a Democrat is elected next year, he's gonna appoint a polliwogs white paper commission, and they're gonna recommend (at least) decriminalization. Hell, then the Chief Executive can save us taxpayers the money used to prosecute the poor bastards who get caught, the taxes might up the economy a little, and all the smokers in the country will vote to re-elect that President who puts his rubber stamp on the commission's recommendation. Who said there aren't any new ploys left in politics?

At any rate, I was thinking that this University, basically being not much of a hotbed of controversy, should get active and start producing some people soon who start talking about, nay, lobbying for, the decriminalization of polliwogs in this commonwealth. It's about time Kentucky was in the forefront of some movement; this one's natural for college students. Or is it? We have the Student Government which isn't likely to endorse a lobbying resolution on polliwogs this year; we have the Young Democrats, right there in the mainstream of Kentucky politics, but they probably won't say much unless Julian gives them his implicit approval first; then we have the law school, and people there are justifiably intimidated about sticking their necks out for something that's illegal, even though a lot of them do indulge in the smoke now and then; and there's the med students, who carry some clout in the technical expertise department; and the faculty, who might at least pass around a petition or something.

Hmmm, I don't know if the time is right yet or not, now that I think about it. Damn, think of the outraged alumni! Ah yes, the past...how it haunts us still (said in my best effort at imitating the immortal bard, W. C. Fields). Well, Al, guess I'll go over to see my editor Winges and ask him what he thinks and then I'll do what I want to anyway....Ain't that the way it always goes?!

TM is Hinduism

By Rick Carter

In response to the article entitled, "Transcendental meditation transcends present education system (Kernel, Nov. 17)," by Michael Fugate and Jim Glockner, I would like to offer a very important additional bit of information of which I believe these gentlemen may be unaware of.

Transcendental Meditation (TM), also called the science of creative intelligence (SCI), claims to be a scientific technique for health and recreation. TM is offered to high school and college students throughout the U.S. by the Students International Meditation Society reported to be the fastest growing student movement in America.

What is SCI or TM? Is it a religion? A science? A philosophy? A technique? Or what? Who and what is behind this massive worldwide movement? Is it merely a preoccupation with Eastern mysticism?

Fugate and Glockner stated: "It (TM) is not a philosophy or religion. It does not require that you change your belief or say that life is beautiful and joyful, only that you meditate 15-20 minutes in the morning and evening and eventually that condition will develop as a permanent reality, whether you believe it or not."

It is at this point that I challenge TM participants to identify the TM "technique" for what it is—Hinduism.

Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, head of the growing TM movement, defines the objective of TM as achieving a direct experience of pure being. Since this abstract existence is believed to be eternal and beyond all thoughts and words, the best Maharishi can do is call it "That." "I am That Eternal Being, thou art That and all this is That." In meditation, he seeks to transcend all thoughts about particular things and to "meditate" upon "Thatness."

What chairmen of the Centers of Creative Intelligence call man's Source, Hindus call Thatness, Brahman or God. This is clearly a Hindu form of pantheism and for this basic idea, the Maharishi himself recognizes his indebtedness to the scriptures of Hinduism, the "Vedas."

There can be no question that the "technique" of TM is characteristic of Hinduism. The Maharishi extols the fact that it is derived from the "Bhagavad-Gita," another exalted Hindu sacred writing. In his extensive commentary on this Hindu sacred writing, Maharishi exclaims: "The 'Bhagavad-Gita' is the Light Of Life, lit by God at the altar of man to save humanity from the darkness of ignorance and suffering....The 'Bhagavad-Gita' is a complete guide to practical life...it brings fulfillment to the life of the individual."

Clearly, then, the Maharishi's method of attaining divine unity is a Hindu method derived from the major Hindu scriptures. However secular the terminology employed by American teachers of SCI and TM, Maharishi knows that the method itself is one of the ways to self-elimination taught in Hindu scripture.

The Christian way to an experience of God differs radically from the TM way to absorption in Brahman. The Christian way leads to loving fellowship with the personal transcendent Lord of the "Bible." The Christian's confidence and hope do not rest upon a repetition to meaningless sounds of mantras, nor upon alleged vibrations of words or thoughts, harmonious or otherwise. Neither does the biblical way to an experience of God require a denial of the plain facts of change and diversity.

Christians do not regard the world either as ultimate reality or as a mere mirage. Christians find no need to persuade themselves of the unreality of that for which there is adequate evidence. Knowing that God has created all things, Christians are open to any material or spiritual reality for which sufficient evidence exists. They do not try to escape reality, but accept it from God. Having met the living God, Christians have no need for inventing a permanent reality and convincing themselves of it by anything like "self-hypnosis."

The gospel of Jesus Christ informs the mind of the fact that God became man, and that eyewitnesses confirmed accounts of Jesus' life, death and resurrection. It summons people to believe these facts. It also informs of God's eternal purposes through Christ's death; that being to re-establish fellowship with mankind through the acceptance of Jesus Christ into the individual's life.

Harvard researcher doubts effects of smoking on health

By MONTY N. FOLEY
Kernel Staff Writer

A Harvard University researcher said Tuesday the non-smoker's exposure to tobacco smoke may be annoying, but "there is no proof that exposure leads to respiratory illnesses."

Speaking at the concluding session of the UK Tobacco and Health Symposium, Dr. Melvin W. First said his recently completed experiment on the effects of smoking in public places should "stimulate interest" on a public issue which has already led to public smoking bans in a few cities and smoking restrictions on commercial airlines.

First said previous studies, which have aroused non-smokers to demand smoking bans, have measured carbon monoxide levels rather than more basic components of tobacco smoke. First questioned the validity of such observations on the grounds that in most public places there are numerous other contributors to carbon monoxide levels besides cigarettes.

In contrast to those studies, First said his study involved the observation of nicotine levels in public places such as airports, train stations, restaurants and cocktail lounges. "Estimation of levels of tobacco smoke in public places was undertaken to evaluate the health implications for non-smokers," First said.

Procedures for evaluating nicotine levels — in Boston public places — included inconspicuous sampling of air with a small battery-powered pump, First said.

"A total of 23 samples were taken in Boston during 1973 and 1974," First said.

Following the sample process, First said, the nicotine levels to which a non-smoker would be exposed in an hour were compared to the amount normally inhaled by a person smoking one filter cigarette containing 16.1 milligrams of nicotine.

According to First's comparisons, a non-smoker in a commuter train inhaled the equivalent of 0.004 filter cigarettes; in an airplane waiting room, 0.003 cigarettes; in a cocktail lounge, 0.009 cigarettes; and in a student lounge, 0.002 cigarettes.

"The data collected suggests that although tobacco-smoke concentrations often exceed the average air quality standards for clean air, these levels would not be expected to produce the strong public reaction to tobacco smoke that has developed in the past few years," First said.

First added that non-smokers' annoyance by tobacco smoke may be caused by gaseous components — such as phenols, aldehydes, and organic acids — produced during tobacco combustion when a cigarette "dies" or is not inhaled by the smoker.

First said awareness of tobacco smoke is increased because its particle size produces a highly visible aerosol at low mass concentrations.

"These factors, taken together, may be a more important cause of the public's adverse reaction to tobacco smoke than the quantity measured in our study of concentrations," First said.

The two-day symposium, held in the Student Center, was sponsored by the UK Tobacco and Health Institute and the Kentucky Tobacco Research Board.

Court releases Stephens after bond lowered

UK star running back Alfred "Sonny" Collins said the three suspects visited him in his dormitory room about 1 a.m. Oct. 12, approximately one and one-half hours following the kidnaping.

Collins has been questioned four times by Metro Police concerning his relationship with the suspects and the events on the night of the kidnaping.

According to Asst. Metro Police Chief Frank Fryman, Collins' name came up during the questioning of the suspects. Stephens told police he visited Collins around midnight.

At the request of the Metro Police Department, the UK Police Department has entered the investigation. Fryman said the "UKPD is doing no more than coordinating our efforts" concerning student involvement.

Several UK students have been questioned by both police departments about the case or related matters, according to Catt.

The case has received national attention with reporters from Sports Illustrated, the Washington Star, New Times and the Louisville Courier Journal investigating the case.

Scott blasts college athletics

dialogue between Randolph and Catherine Hearst reported in Rolling Stone was "either fake or supplied by FBI tapes from bugs in the Hearst home. And I don't think I need to tell you which it was."

Scott said the SLA and former leader Donald DeFreeze were "much less of a threat to an alleged democratic society than the Nixon, Haldeman, Erlichman and Mitchell gang."

"The FBI made extensive abuses and admits to spending millions of dollars under the guise of hunting down the SLA while they led a stumbling investigation of Watergate—an attempt to subvert democratic government," he said.

Scott said the FBI "murdered" SLA members in a gun battle at a Los Angeles hideout and "waited for prime-time television to do it."

Scott said the FBI is so corrupt that a citizen has little choice in dealing with them. "You have the choice of non-collaboration, which I chose, or to shoot like the SLA. But I personally think that is futile and only obscures who the real terrorists are."

Among the variety of topics discussed by the 33-year-old Director of the Institute for the Study of Sport and Society were abuses of the grand jury system, his two-year tenure as athletic director at Oberlin and FBI harassment.

Scott, whose wife Micki McGee Scott has been granted "use immunity" by a Harrisburg, Pa. federal grand jury, described Lexington grand jury witness Jill Raymond as courageous for remaining in jail eight months to avoid "becoming an informant for the FBI." Raymond was jailed last March for refusing to testify before a federal grand jury about alleged knowledge of two fugitives who reportedly lived in Lexington.

At a 4 p.m. press conference, Scott said his wife was granted immunity for purposes of gaining information to use against him and general "intelligence gathering."

The major portion of Scott's one and one-half hour speech was devoted to athletics. The former high school All-American athlete and recipient of an athletic scholarship to Syracuse University often paraded across stage to demonstrate his points.

Scott said he raised the Oberlin budget for women's sports from $600 when he took over as athletic director to $20,000. He also opened facilities at the small private college to the community.

Scott also abolished admission fees for athletic events at Oberlin and hired three black coaches. He said these events provoked a "turmoil in the Oberlin administration which eventually led to the resignation of Scott and 17 other administrators."

One black coach hired by Scott, former Olympics star Tommie Smith, was "whitelisted" and unable to get employment, according to Scott. But he said Oberlin track and field records were broken after Smith took the coaching position.

Another black, football coach Cass Jackson, was selected by the Oberlin football team with Scott's permission. In the two years Jackson coached, Scott said, the Oberlin team had its first winning season in 15 years.

Despite the football program's success, Scott said, Jackson resigned because of racism in the Oberlin administration.

Scott said blacks are still discriminated against in sports. "You see black players, but how many black quarterbacks or coaches or general managers? Blacks in the last 10 years have been given minor positions after the owners make sure 'we don't get no riots here.'"

Regarding FBI harassment, Scott said at the press conference: "Phones have been tapped at every residence we've lived in for the past five years. My parents have been questioned continuously—for awhile they acted like they'd find Patty Hearst in my parents' bedroom. And several friends have lost employment opportunities because of involvement with me."

Although Scott said FBI "harassment" against him has slackened, he hastily added, "You pay a heavy price for refusing to talk to the FBI."

Asked if any events in Lexington led him to speak here, Scott, who has recently spoken at the University of California and Syracuse University, said, "Few colleges in the country are as infamous in athletic tradition as the University of Kentucky. And illegal use of the grand jury system—similar to that used against myself, my wife and my mother and father—has spread to the feminist community here."

Scott was paid $4,000 for the Student Center Board Contemporary Affairs Committee presentation.

Haggin Hall 'instigators' swipe Holmes' beer barrel

By JIM BELZA
Kernel Staff Writer

Four Haggin Hall residents successfully pilfered the Halloween Bowl beer barrel from its stand in the Holmes Hall lounge Monday.

The beer barrel is a rotating trophy awarded to the winner of the Haggin-Hoimes flag football Halloween Bowl each year. According to tradition, it is up to the losing dorm to steal the barrel from its place in the winners' hall. This year marked the first victory for Holmes, thus the first time Haggin has had to swipe the trophy.

The heist took place at approximately 8:30 p.m. The four Haggin "instigators," as they call themselves, had no previously conceived plans for stealing the barrel. Acting on the spur of the moment, they positioned themselves strategically upon deciding to make the attempt. One instigator was stationed at the lobby telephone in case of an emergency. The second stood behind the wall near the lounge entrance, and the third manned the front doors. The fourth instigator was the man who actually snatched the barrel.

Once outside, the instigators rushed the barrel across the street, where they deposited it in a laundry cart between the Student Center and the Alumni Gym. After a span of about 20 minutes, two of the men returned to pick up the barrel. It was then relayed to a hiding place for safekeeping.

The instigators have announced that they will withhold the barrel until their demands have been met. Plans are currently being drawn up as to what the Holmes government or head resident will have to do in order to reclaim the trophy. The plans will be announced once the severity of the demands has been determined by the instigators.

Were Scott's changes 'radically' dangerous?

Some people would consider Jack Scott a dangerous man.

Scott is the controversial sports figure whose name was linked with Patty Hearst. But that's not the only reason people would find him dangerous.

In the sacred world of sport, anyone who advocates "radical" changes is very quickly classified as expendable. It's the old "don't rock the boat" syndrome.

dick gabriel

"There was supposed to be no place to get funds," Scott said at a press conference yesterday afternoon. "So I said that unless we find funds to increase the budget, we would have to, one by one, abolish some of the men's sports to support the women's program." When Scott left Oberlin, the budget for the women was $20,000 and none of the men's sports had been cancelled.

The community of Oberlin is not a wealthy one. Since the college is non-profit, it pays little in taxes. The university is the town, the town gets little in tax money, so as a result, the town is small.

The athletic facilities at the college far exceeded in quality anything the town had to offer. But only the faculty and students had access to them, and Scott felt this was unjust.

He instituted a program in which the townspeople could use the college's facilities at certain hours of the day.

"Probably one of the most satisfying moments of my life was an evening when I could walk through the gym and see youngsters participating in a program they'd never had before," he said.

The administration was not overly thrilled with the programs, which also included opportunities for the senior citizens. But Scott said "I felt the gym was there, and the more it was used, the better."

The man who had been president at Oberlin before Fuller took over would close the Olympic-sized swimming pool to the public and use it exclusively for himself and a select group of friends, according to Scott.

When it came time to select a football coach, Scott said he realized that it was not so important that he choose a coach whom he could regard as a buddy, but that the coach get along with the team. Therefore, he left the selection to the team and the physical education majors (the coach would be required to teach physical education courses at Oberlin).

The coach, a black man named Cass Jackson, led the team to its first winning season in 15 years.

One of the most significant changes during Scott's term was the abolition of admission fees to football and basketball games.

"If the football players and coaches brought in more revenue, they'd feel more important than the tennis and volleyball players," Scott said. "Football may be more popular, but the football players don't profit more themselves. They still walk around with the same conceit, and expect special privileges."

The idea is noble, and worked well at the small college. Attendances increased at the Oberlin games, there were no riots at the gates, and the move helped "bring harmony between the college and the town."

However, the notion would probably not work at a major university. Budgets for the major (i.e., revenue-producing) sports are so great that unlike the teams at small colleges, they depend heavily upon gate receipts.

Abolish admission fees and budgets shrink, athletic programs dwindle, the major university loses prominence, enrollment drops, and the overall status of the college suffers. Sad, but true.

BY FILLING OUT JUST ONE MORE DOGGONE FORM!

Want to be partners with the Greater Lexington Chamber of Commerce to cut down on pollution, traffic congestion, and accidents? Want to help with the parking problem on campus? Best of all, do you want to save money? Then why not join a carpool? It can save you as much as $647.52 this year and if you attend summer school, even more!

HERE'S HOW IT WORKS:

Your completed questionnaire is fed into a computer in Frankfort. There it is matched with those of others who live and attend classes at the same campus.

You then receive a computer printout giving their names, addresses, phone numbers, and whether they are day students or night students.

Once you get your printout, you aren't obligated to start or join a carpool. That decision is entirely yours. It will be up to you to contact those on your matching list to set up a car pool. If you decide not to investigate carpooling when your printout comes, you can keep it to use later if you change your mind.

Even if you have previously filled out a questionnaire in connection with another carpool program, are now in a carpool or don't intend to join one, please take a few minutes to complete this questionnaire. Your answers will contribute to overall transportation statistics that will be most helpful in community planning programs. And this information may be used as a basis for a transportation study on campus.

If you have questions, Call Vivian Littral or Nancy Dade at 254-4451.

*The Federal Highway Administration estimates an average 20 mile round trip to cost $6.18. If that cost were shared by another person, it would be $3.04; by a four person carpool, $1.52 and by a six person carpool, $1.01. For a four person carpool, that's an annual saving of $647.52 ($4.56 times 142 academic days.)

Prompted by Taylor probe UK investigating possible NCAA violations

(Editor's note: Information in the following article was compiled by Walter Hixson, assistant managing editor; John Winn Miller, assistant managing editor; and Ron Mitchell, Kernel staff writer.)

President Otis A. Singletary announced Wednesday that the University has begun an investigation into possible violations of National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) and UK Student Code regulations.

Information obtained in the investigation of the alleged kidnap-murder of Luron Eugene Taylor prompted the investigation, according to a Wednesday University Information Services release.

Although information discovered during the Taylor case started the UK probe, Singletary said it "does not involve any of the criminal matters under investigation by the Lexington Metro and University police."

The investigation began Monday, Nov. 17. After consultation, the Commonwealth Attorney advised the University that an investigation of internal matters could be undertaken without jeopardizing criminal proceedings, the release stated.

Law Professor Robert Lawson will investigate the possible violation of NCAA regulations and Dean of Students Joe Burch will examine possible Student Code violations. Both declined comment.

In the release, Singletary said specifics of the investigation could not be released because it could possibly be "detrimental to individual rights." He added, however, that there is no evidence of point-shaving in the information available.

Singletary said later he has notified the NCAA of the internal investigation David Berst, an NCAA enforcement official, would neither confirm or deny that the NCAA is conducting an investigation.

Athletic Director Cliff Hagan said the decision to announce the investigation "came after much discussion, especially in view of the upcoming football game with Tennessee."

"We decided that it would be the most responsible thing to do in regard to everyone involved," Hagan said. He also said he has been informed of all aspects of the investigation.

Tom Padgett, public safety director, said the University Police Department (UKPD) will cooperate in the internal investigation as long as it doesn't jeopardize any criminal case. UKPD is not investigating possible violations of NCAA or Student Code regulations, he added.

Regarding Lawson's role in the probe, Padgett said it is standard procedure for a faculty member or non-administrator to conduct an investigation when possible NCAA violations are involved.

Metro Police Captain Robert Duncan said his department "will cooperate with any police agency or organization in the community in any investigation they are conducting."

Wildcat football coach Fran Curci has said he will cooperate with the University's investigation but will concentrate on preparation for Saturday's game against Tennessee rather than become actively involved in the inquiry.

Since UKPD officially entered the investigation several weeks ago, numerous students have been questioned. Metro Police have said they are investigating only the Oct. 11 alleged kidnaping and

101 Club asks to hold benefit concert in Coliseum

By JAMIE LUCKE
Kernel Staff Writer

A 101 Club request to stage a concert in Memorial Coliseum has been sent to the Student Center Board (SCB) for consideration, Dean of Students Joe Burch said.

The SCB which has exclusive rights to the use of Memorial Coliseum for concerts during the academic year will probably discuss the 101 Club request at its next meeting, Tom Wheeler, SCB Mini-Concert Committee chairperson said.

The 101 Club is an off-campus UK basketball booster organization.

Wheeler said the concert committee tentatively approved the request last week. But the committee will recommend that SCB approval of the 101 Club request include the following stipulations:

—approval should not be interpreted as violating the SCB's exclusive right to Memorial Coliseum for concerts, and outside groups should be required to apply for SCB approval before being granted the use of Memorial Coliseum.

—the 101 club would only be allowed to stage the concert at the end of the semester when all SCB sponsored activities are completed. This stipulation would leave only one week-end at the end of this semester to hold the concert, Wheeler said.

—the 101 Club could not book a concert that would draw from the SCB's usual concert crowd, and —should the 101 Club be granted permission to book a show similar to SCB concerts, publicity and ticket sales for the concert could not begin until after the final SCB concert.

ASCB concert is planned for the next to last week-end of this semester, Wheeler said. The proposed stipulations would restrict 101 Club concert promotion until a week before the concert if the concert is similar to a SCB concert, Wheeler said.

It would be almost impossible to successfully publicize a show in a week, Wheeler added.

Concert committee members hope to avoid the staging of a concert in Memorial Coliseum "interfering with SCB shows, public relations time or crowd draw," Wheeler said.

101 Club President, Bill Clay, said his group would like to have a concert, but the concert proposal is still in "exploratory" stages. Hopefully the concert would "attract both University students and townspeople," Clay said. The club has "entertainment groups like Chicago or John Denver" in mind for the concert, he said.

101 Club concert committee chairman Jim Potter said he had informally applied to Burch for permission to stage a concert in Memorial Coliseum.

Potter also said the 101 Club would agree to holding the concert during the summer. SCB's exclusive right to Memorial Coliseum for concerts extends from September to May, Burch said.

Burch said the University receives many requests from groups wishing to use the Coliseum.

"This is basically a SCB decision. The request came to me and I passed it on down to them," Burch said.

Burch said a number of questions need to be answered before a decision regarding the 101 Club request can be reached. These questions include the type of concert planned by the 101 Club and when the concert would be held, Burch said.

U.S.-Turkey relationship called alliance but not a friendship

By LYNNE FUNK
Kernel Staff Writer

Turkey's relationship with the U.S. should be considered an alliance but not a friendship, said Dr. Ilter Turan, University of Istanbul political science professor.

Turan addressed 40 people at the close of a three-day Middle East Symposium on "Turkey, Cyprus and U.S.-Turkish Relationships," Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Walter Weiker, Syracuse University political science professor, joined Turan in the presentation, sponsored by the Patterson School of Diplomacy.

Turan intervened in Cyprus in July 1974 because of "constant change favoring the Greek government," Turan said. "Greek control of the island would have been dangerous because they would have gained a military capability."

About 80 per cent of Cyprus's 600,000 residents are Greeks, Weiker said. The island, located 40 miles south of Turkey was controlled by Greek Cypriots until the 1974 Turkish intervention.

"The U.S. has the dubious distinction of being the only country that has alienated Greece and Turkey at the same time," Weiker said.

After World War II, U.S.-Turkish relations were good and both countries assumed they would remain so, Weiker said. The U.S. wanted allies around the Soviet Union, and NATO member Cyprus was a good candidate, with its democratic multi-party system and desire for Western associations, he said.

"In the '50's the two countries began to drift apart," he said. "Turkey was economically and culturally closer to Europe and in the '70's became wary of associating with a country involved in Vietnam."

Turan gave other reasons for Turkey's discontent with its U.S. ties. The U.S. demanded a ban on cultivation of poppies in 1967, claiming that 90 per cent of opium came into the U.S. from Cyprus.

"It is doubtful that Cyprus could ever produce that much opium," Turan said. "Turkey was picked as a vulnerable ally so that (President Lyndon) Johnson could prove he was a law and order man. There have been no serious efforts in the U.S. to deal with illegal opium," he said.

Now the U.S. government claims that most illegal opium is imported from Mexico, but has forced no bans there, he said.

Letters

Controversy

Editor:

Not being a member of any special interest group on campus I feel a little apprehensive about writing this letter to such obviously fine organizations as Student Government (SG) and the Kentucky Kernel. But I will try to rise to the occasion.

My main concern has been with the controversy that has come up over the recent General Student Assembly (GSA) meeting. I read the Kernel daily but for some reason I must have skimmed over the article on the GSA meeting and with all the confusion in SG President Jim Harralson's administration no other announcements were put out for the general student population so I missed out all together.

Being somewhat of a student of politics I understand what motives Harralson might have had in organizing the meeting the way he did. But it really isn't fair to leave me, a normal interested student, out in the cold.

I support most of the resolutions that were passed at the GSA meeting and am very glad to see them brought out into the open. I don't support former Arts and Sciences Senator Murion Wade's proposed amendment to abolish the GSA because it could be a very useful tool for the students if handled properly.

I do intend to be at the next GSA meeting which I hear has been scheduled for sometime after Thanksgiving. The only question I would raise now to Harralson about the last meeting is: Did the ends achieved justify the means?

A&S junior

Loser

Editor:

After reading the Kernel on Nov. 19 you finally made me mad enough to write this letter. You put Jack Scott on the front page not for any other reason but that he was anti-college athletics, which makes him pro-Kernel.

All season long the Kernel has found some way to run down the football program. You started by over amplifying the Luron Eugene Taylor case and Sonny Collins' involvement. Why, there are hundreds of students questioned every year by the police and they don't even get recognition. There are students arrested for everything from pushing drugs to stealing lazars and all Sonny did was talk to these guys for about 15 minutes —that rates a special edition.

Then you start with that stupid article about breaking NCAA rules and taking a possible recruit to Keeneland. Then the Kernel started a point shaving rumor and on and on until you put Coach Fran Curci and his players under so much strain that they don't even feel like representing this college. You would make someone believe that it was Curci that caused the journalism school to lose its accreditation.

I personally blame the Kernel for the bad season the football team is having and I hope Curci realizes that the Kernel represents just a very, very small part of the campus and the rest of us still support him. In my opinion the big loser on this campus is the Kernel.

Michael Moberly
A&S junior

(Editor's note: The Kernel has not printed one word about point shaving and the UK football team. Concerning the placement of the Scott story on the front page, the Kernel thought this was a newsworthy event deserving the placement it received.)

Racism

Editor:

November 22, is an important day for everyone to remember! On that day the Student Coalition Against Racism will sponsor a Teach-In on Racism, starting at 9 a.m. in the Student Center Theater. Racism thrives on ignorance, but we can give it fewer places to dwell by attending this important educational happening.

Also for the football fan, our Cats will end what has been a very dismal season with a great victory over Tennessee.

So, I hope that all of you will plan to come on campus early and to leave late. See you in the Student Center Theater!

Richard Flewelling
Social Work senior

(Editor's note: Because of the number of letters and commentaries received by the Kernel, there is no editorial today. In cases where a number of letters and commentaries are received about one or several subjects, more space is devoted to readers' views. ## Unpublished poet circulates widely

(What follows is an interview, of sorts, with the semi-mythical underground poet who writes under the pen name of Simian Medulla. I've heard stories about him for years — even read quite a few of the handwritten copies of his poems that have been circulating through the literary world lately —but until two weeks ago I only half-believed in his existence.

Well, he does exist. I met him by chance at a party —he's living in Kentucky for the time being —and, after many, many drinks, he consented to give me this interview. His only condition was that I not reveal his true identity.

The interview took place in a local bar, and I've set it down here right off the tape with a bare minimum of editing. Just before he passed out, Medulla asked for permission to do his own editing of the final product, but he never showed up for the session....I assume, then, that he stands by what he says here. For my part, I can vouch for the accuracy of the transcription).

SP: With all the interest that's been generated in you lately, will you soon have a collection of poems coming out?

SM: No. I don't publish my poems. It's my desire to remain unpublished. I don't think I could handle it right now. Maybe in 10-15 years...There's been a lot of pressure on me lately to publish some of the better-known stuff that's been circulating. Right now I have no intention of doing so.

SP: Some of your work has been circulating pretty widely. I remember in particular a little sheaf of verse called "Cigarette Butthole." I've seen that as far away as Oregon.

SM: Yes. That's probably my most widely-read poem. Look, I wasn't seeking any notoriety when that poem came out; as a matter of fact, it was stolen from the back seat of my car when it was parked behind the Diplomat Lounge in Frankfort, and it got into the hands of some people who wanted to see me more widely known. They started hand-printing it up and sending it around...So right now it is my most famous poem. It's a very curious poem, and very complex. It would probably take a graduate student in English to understand it. (Laughter.) It sprang from an epiphanic moment I had in the restroom of a Holiday Inn bar. I was pissing, and there was a cigarette butt in the urinal. I was also very horny. All of this came together in a fine thunderclap of inspiration, and...well, there you are. As you might guess, I like to write love poetry.

SP: How did you happen to take up writing?

SM: Difficult question. I think I took it up after some tragic love affair or another, but I can't exactly remember which one. I do remember a prose piece I did when I was very young, called "France: Social Conditions." I did it under the pen name "Dave Mitty." I was going in for the scholarly work then.

SP: Who are your favorite poets?

SM: I consider Arthur Bremer our greatest living poet. A lot of people have said that....

SP: Wait a minute. Arthur Bremer? You serious?

SM: Of course. Forget the fact that he's a would-be assassin. To the poetic mind, an assassination is just molecules moving through space into other molecules. I've read some of Bremer's jail writings. He's a great poet. Remember what he shouted as he shot Wallace? "A penny for your thoughts!" That summed up Wallace's life, the entire true worth of his thoughts, in one highly charged, poetic phrase. Bremer's a giant. He looms large on the literary horizon. Watch out for a short poem of his called "A Chicken in Every Pot, A Bullet in Every Head." Dynamite stuff.

SP: I notice you keep looking at that football game and grimacing. Are you a gambler?

SM: Yes. And there are many similarities between gambling and poetry. They both...capture the most intensity out of one moment, if you see what I mean. A gambler can take something totally meaningless, like a football game, and with one $250 bet turn it into something of supreme importance. That's what a poet does. Take tonight's football game. The spread is six and one-half....

SP: Seven.

SM: Uh...I thought it was six and one-half.

SP: No, it's seven.

SM: It went to seven?

SP: Yeah.

SM: Oh. Let's get off this subject then. I got a loser. (laughter.) Hey, sweetheart bring us two more.

SP: Alright. I have to wonder about this obscurity you've cultivated for so long. I mean, your name is known in limited circles all over the country, yet the general public knows nothing about you and you haven't made a penny off your work. Aren't you at all bitter about this?

SM: It's not my goal to make money out of this. I do admit to a certain discouragement...But look, it's not so bad to be an unpublished poet. Last summer, we had an unpublished poet's convention in Chicago. We all got together. Nobody read anything, of course. Nothing literary happened. There was a lot of drinking, but...Most people just stayed in their rooms. Unpublished poets don't like to be seen out. Somebody might see them and recognize them and ask for a poem. So we mostly just...As a matter of fact, I never left my room, and I never did really see any of the other unpublished poets, but I knew they were around. So, to answer your question, I intend to remain anonymous, unpublished, and unread, to the greatest degree I can manage. It's the way I want it.

SP: You know, I see a lot of Kilgore Trout in you.

SM: Who?

SP: Kilgore Trout. Vonnegut's alter-ego.

SM: Vonnegut who?

SP: Kurt Vonnegut. American novelist. Very....

SM: Oh, I don't read novelists. Never heard of him. I send any novels that are given to me to the Rosewater Foundation in Indiana to be distributed among the poor. (Much laughter.)

SP: I'm running out of tape. Do you have one last statement that would sum up your life, your poetry, your work to this point?

SM: Yeah, I think I do...I need another beer.

Lyons to assume seat when council meets

By MONTY N. FOLEY
Kernel Staff Writer

When the Lexington-Fayette Urban County Council holds its first session of 1976, Dr. William E. Lyons, UK associate political science professor, will be one of five new council members seated. Lyons, who represented the Eighth District, will, ironically, replace William H. McCann, who was elected to the original council in 1973.

Lyons said both he and McCann were instrumental in drafting the charter for merged government, and in promoting its adoption by the local electorate.

During an interview yesterday, Lyons spoke about some of the issues that the council must face in the near future.

"Prior to merged government, the county allowed high density housing developments to build up and deferred the question of building costly sewer systems," Lyons said.

"Now, we are faced with a situation in which kids are playing in sewage. This problem should have been faced 20 or 30 years ago," Lyons said.

While current plans call for home-owners to finance sewage systems to replace septic tank disposal, Lyons said federal revenue sharing funds might relieve some of the financial burden.

Collective bargaining for public employees is another issue that local government must eventually come to grips with, Lyons said. There are a number of bills before the legislature in Frankfort dealing with collective bargaining, he added.

"Although Lexington is not a strong union town, as evidenced by the fact that the city's two largest employers — IBM and the University — don't have unions; collective bargaining for public employees is not a remote possibility," Lyons said.

On the other hand, Lyons said the momentum behind collective bargaining for public employees may have been decreased by strikes in other cities.

There are alternatives to having the local governments directly provide necessary services for the public, Lyons said. "In many cities private contractors are now providing sanitation service," Lyons said. "In some areas fire departments are provided by private firms, Lyons said.

Furthermore, Lyons said he and others "would like to see more involvement between the University and the local government. There's no need for the local government to have to go to Atlanta for research when such work could be done by University people," Lyons said.

Agriculture sociologists conduct political survey

By KEITH SHANNON
Kernel Staff Writer

The UK Cooperative Extension Service is evaluating the results of a statewide study designed to provide Kentucky legislators with an idea of how Kentuckians feel about state and local governmental issues.

The study, consisting of questionnaires sent to 6,000 Kentuckians, is under the direction of Rabel J. Burdge and Paul D. Warner, agriculture department sociologists.

Burdge said all the questionnaires to be used in the study have been received. "Now we must tabulate them and organize the results," he said.

The results of the study will be compiled in booklet form and distributed to state and local government officials, universities, and interested citizens around the state. They should be ready for release around Dec. 1, Burdge said.

The 11-page questionnaire contained questions covering several topics. Questions covered road conditions, the local job market situation, strip mining and environmental protection.

Although the state legislature is going to receive the results of the study, state government is not directly involved in the study's funding, Burdge said. He said federal funds are provided under Title V of the 1972 Rural Development Act. "It (the study) has nothing to do with the state government," he said.

Burdge said the data obtained from the study will not only be used to draw conclusions about the state in general, but will also be helpful in making detailed studies of specific regions. "We plan on spending the next two years on detailed reports," he said.

Burdge said he hopes to be able to conduct similar studies every three years, but no definite plans have been made and no funding sought.

Club asks for benefit concert

"We would not want them to do anything that would conflict with our own concert schedule," he said.

University policy says that "during the academic year the SCB has the sole right to promote concerts on campus," Burch said.

"The SCB is in charge of all campus programming. The SCB couldn't be successful if other groups could do the same kind of programming they do."

Burch said the 101 Club has provided ushers for SCB concerts at significantly lower prices than usually would be charged for the ushering service. He also mentioned the 101 Club's "attachment to the University and its supportive role."

"The proceeds (from the concert) would be used to benefit the University," Burch said.

The proposed concert would be used to support the University basketball program. The 101 Club, a tax exempt organization, puts "most of our money directly or indirectly into the University," Potter said.

Organizations using the Coliseum for commercial purposes are required to pay a $1,000 per night rental fee or ten per cent of the gross proceeds. Charitable organizations may use the Coliseum rent free. Burch said he thought the 101 Club would be required to pay the rental fee.

Relationship with Turkey called alliance but not friendship

"American and Russian Cyprus policies are the same: fickle. Both change by the day," Turan said.

American intervention in Cyprus politics was motivated by the desire to establish NATO military installations on the island, he said.

The U.S. also attempted to increase the popularity of a totalitarian Greek regime when it sided with Greece against Turkish intervention on Cyprus, he said.

"The U.S. tried to keep both Greece and Turkey from war," Weiker said. "Congress was looking for an issue when it attempted to control Cyprus; it based its actions on the assumption that Turkey would always be friendly."

Turkey was not about to be friendly when annexation of Cyprus to Greece was imminent, Turan said.

The Turkish government maintains that it was within the boundaries of international law when it acted to preserve the status quo in Cyprus, he said.

Turkey currently controls the northeastern portion of Cyprus, Turan said.

subsequent murder and not related matters which could involve University students.

Two former students and a third man are charged with the alleged kidnaping and murder of Taylor. They are: Elmore Stephens, 23; John Bishop, 22; and Robert Channels, 22.

Stephens was an All-American on the 1974 Wildcat football team and Bishop is a former team manager. Stephens and Bishop are from Louisville and Channels is from Lexington.

Taylor's body was found Oct. 21 floating in the Ohio River near Louisville, about five miles east of the Jefferson County Police River Station. The Jefferson County coroner's office ruled Taylor was murdered and death was attributed to strangulation.

First one in Cincinnati Capacity Riverfront crowd sees Monday night game

By MARK BRADLEY
Kernel Staff Writer

The capacity crowd at Riverfront Stadium and the millions of television viewers which saw the game on ABC's Monday Night Football saw the Cincinnati Bengals and Ken Anderson outdue O.J. Simpson and the Buffalo Bills 33-24.

This was the first time that Riverfront Stadium has hosted a Monday night regular season game, and the fans were excited by the prospects of seeing their favorite team win on national television. They were also hopeful of getting on camera themselves during one of the famous "crowd shots."

Notably absent from the stadium were the banners customarily seen at Monday night games, as the Bengals' policy is to outlaw banners from Riverfront. However, a few brave fans did manage to sneak banners and signs into the stadium. Perhaps the loudest boos of the evening were reserved for the policemen who ordered that the few banners and signs be taken down. The most memorable sign of the night proclaimed, "Bengal Menu — Buffalo Meat and Orange Juice."

One boy did manage to smuggle into the stadium a small placard reading "Go, O.J.," and the youngster showed wisdom beyond his years by only flashing the sign when no police officers were looking.

In addition to transistor radios and stadium blankets with which most fans outfitted themselves on the cold autumn night, some clever fans brought to the game battery-operated television sets, so as not to miss any of the commentary of the ABC triumvirate of Frank Gifford, Alex Karras, and Howard Cosell. One such individual was rather indignant as he lugged his Sony to his car after the game. "All they did was talk about O.J.," he complained.

The inimitable Cosell was greeted with a mixture of cheers and boos when his name was flashed on the Riverfront Stadium message board. Ever the showman, Cosell stood up in the ABC booth and waved to the crowd, precipitating still another outbreak of cheering and booing.

The most dramatic figure on the field wore number 32 for the Bills, and the crowd was properly appreciative of the efforts of O.J. Simpson. Although the message board kept exhorting the Cincinnati defense to "Squeeze the Juice," the fans generally wanted to see the great back from USC get his 200 yards, as long as the Bengals won the game. Although Simpson did fall three yards short of 200, his 197 yards represented the most ever gained by one runner against the Bengals.

As the crowd filed out of the Riverfront after the game, speculating on the Bengals' chances of winning the Super Bowl, marveling at the performances of Ken Anderson and O.J. Simpson and laughing at Howard Cosell, even the most blasé of football fans was forced to admit he had just witnessed something very special — even though he did miss the "Halftime Highlights."

Field hockey team loses in regional tourney

By TERRY GABBARD
Kernel Staff Writer

The women's field hockey team closed its season with a 1-1 record at the regional tournament in Fredricksburg, Va. last weekend.

Longwood College whipped UK 6-1 Friday as Karen Abrams produced the Lady Kats' only goal in the first half.

Saturday, UK came back from a 2-0 deficit at the half to edge Bridgewater College 3-2. Left wing Wendy Martin scored two goals and center-forward Ceal Barry added one.

UK had earned a spot in the regional as runner-up in the state tournament held two weeks ago at Berea.

State champion Eastern also lost early in the tournament to William and Mary College, the team which advanced to win the regional tournament.

Coach Susie Stammer said UK's 10-7-3 record for the season

"reflects the up and down play" the team has experienced all season. "Inconsistency has been a problem all along," she said.

But Stammer described her squad as a team of "finesse" which had been "improving and developing" as the season progressed.

Barry led the team in goals for the season with 16. Wendy Martin followed with 10.

The Bridgewater game was the last for seniors Martin, Donna Porter, and Connie Buehl.

Porter will remain at UK as Stammer's assistant coach next year.

Despite losing these three starters, Stammer said she is optimistic about UK's 1976 season. Hopeful of landing new hockey players from the Louisville area, Stammer said UK should be able to "fill up the gaps." "I'm already looking forward to next year," she said.

Scott feels athletic programs becoming too 'professionalized'

Much to the dismay of college football coaches, players and fans, the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) has installed rule changes which will supposedly help ease the financial crunch which has finally struck college sports.

Only 60 football players are allowed to dress for home games and 40 players make road trips. Basketball scholarships are being gradually reduced and there are cutbacks being made in the minor sports.

dick gabriel

Any changes proposed by the NCAA are cosmetic, according to controversial sports figure Jack Scott, who lectured at UK Wednesday night. "They're not installed to get at the real problem that caused the evils."

The NCAA rule changes are "financially motivated," Scott said. "They're not trying to enrich intercollegiate athletics."

The evils of which Scott speaks can be summed up in three words — professionalized college athletics. Scott said colleges "recruit a man for the specific purpose of not getting an education but to participate in a professionalized athletic program."

But all, according to Scott, is not lost. "There is a simple proposition if people are sincere in bringing sanity to college athletics," he said.

He proposed an accrediting agency, which would examine cross-sections of the athletic populace, including grade-point average, and compare it to a cross-section of average students.

"If the cross-section of students participating in intercollegiate athletics is different than those who don't participate, then it will show a definite professionalization into college athletics," Scott said. "This would be done in order to avoid a select group of people from being brought in to compete in intercollegiate athletics."

"The agencies would revoke accreditations if they found these things going on. This punishment would put more fear in the hearts of administrators than to say: 'You can't be on television for two years (one of the punishments inflicted on schools found in violation of NCAA regulations).'"

Some people point to a time when professionalism in the college ranks is a recognized standard, but Scott does not foresee this. "The NCAA prefers to keep it the way it is because they regulate wages the athletes are paid for scholarships, laundry money, and so forth. For that reason, I don't think we will ever have clear-cut recognition that these people are professional athletes."

The key words which seemed to bother Scott the most were "student-athlete." Granted, many athletes are in school solely for the purpose of competing in athletics as a stepping stone to the professional ranks, but there is still hope. Jocks such as Tom Ranieri and Bob Guyette, who are academic All-Americans in fields such as pre-medicine and pre-dentistry, help provide some reason to believe that sweeping statements such as the ones provided by Scott are not yet necessary.

There is also the case of the impoverished athlete who plays his way out of his poverty-stricken habitat and, through college athletics, is able to get an education.

It may be a little soon to try to clean up college athletics with a blow-torch. But unless steps are taken to "clean up the act," be it through accrediting agencies or abolition of recruiting practices, a complete wash-out could become necessary.

Turkish professor offers Mideast views at seminar

By STEVE BALLINGER
 Kernel Staff Writer

The time is ripe for a final resolution of the Arab-Israeli impasse, said a Turkish professor who spoke Tuesday at the Patterson School of Diplomacy Symposium on the Middle East.

Oles Smolansky, a visiting professor at Lehigh University in Pennsylvania, said Israel, Egypt and other Arab countries now appear to favor a political settlement.

Smolansky's speech centered on the conflicting policies of the United States and the Soviet Union in the Middle East. He offered three American alternatives: unilateral action, continued super power competition, and cooperative effort.

Direct action, such as seizing Arabian oilfields, would cripple U.S. prestige and make the Mideast receptive to Soviet influence, Smolansky said. He also rejected continued competition because the political and military rivalry between the U.S. and the Soviet Union has caused international ill effects.

American efforts to curb Soviet expansion have been unsuccessful since the end of World War II but still continue because of outdated policies, Smolansky said.

"Conditions which led to the Mediterranean Navys no longer exist," he said, citing the U.S. 6th Fleet and Polaris nuclear submarines as an example of outdated foreign policy.

Ocean fleets could not contain socialism (in Portugal and Malta) and the Polaris force was unnecessary because missiles launched from North America can also reach Asia, Smolansky said. Soviet and U.S. policies have heightened Mideast tensions, he said. For example: proliferation of weapons is much more serious because medium-range missiles have been added to the opposing armaments; the two superpowers do not want to be pitted against each other politically; and, the "radicalization of politics" in Arab countries has increased.

"I suspect the Russians want to maintain relations with someone like (Egyptian President Anwar) Sadat instead of leaders like Yassir Arafat of the Palestinian Liberation Organization," Smolansky said.

"Most Arab radicals are pro-Chinese. The last thing Russia wants is a proliferation of pro-Peking sentiment," he said.

Sadat became dissatisfied with the Soviet Union and turned to the U.S. when he saw that the U.S.S.R. was not interested in returning Egyptian lands occupied by Israel, Smolansky said.

Egyptians, Smolansky added, also dislike Russians. "Russians don't like to discuss things...they aren't as culturally advanced as the British, French and even the Americans and they are stingy and unfriendly. The Egyptians didn't like Russians, and they could sense the Russians didn't like them either."

Because of the critical Mideast situation, Smolansky said a compromise agreement respecting Soviet interests was the most promising solution.

Any agreement that didn't satisfy the Soviet Union, or didn't satisfy Mideast countries, will not be a lasting one, Smolansky said. Unless consideration is given to the Soviet Union, he said, "Soviet opportunities to fish in troubled waters will be almost limitless."

We goofed

Because of incorrect information supplied to the Kernel we reported that Jack Scott was paid $4,000 by the Student Center Board Contemporary Affairs Committee to speak Tuesday night. Actually, Scott received $1,200.

Because of incorrect information supplied to the Kernel, an article on the Chi Omega Greek Sing (Kernel, Nov. 13) incorrectly stated that Sigma Nu fraternity was the sweepstakes winner in the 1974 contest. Actually, Gamma Phi Beta sorority won the sweepstakes trophy last year.
