More than 400 urge Roselle to stay

Says he is still looking for signals from state

By TONJA WILT
Campus Editor

UK President David Roselle said yesterday that if the state makes a commitment to fund higher education in the next biennium, he could be persuaded to remain at UK.

"I want to be at UK but on conditions," Roselle told reporters yesterday. "Those that I can run an adequate education program that is appropriate. There is not really an urge to stay if there is not appropriate funds."

Roselle's remarks came after a rally in front of the Administration Building in which more than 400 students, faculty and staff demonstrated their support for him.

Students held banners and posters beseeching Roselle not to leave UK and asking Gov. Wallace Wilkinson and other state leaders to better fund higher education.

Roselle, who is one of four finalists for the presidency of the University of Delaware, will visit the Wilmington, Del., campus Monday.

One of the reasons Roselle said he is attracted to Delaware is because it is better funded by its state leaders than UK.

"Delaware is a school that is well financed and is a school that is ambitious to do things, and that makes it a special place," Roselle said. "The University of Delaware is financed better than the University of Kentucky."

Without adequate funding from the state, Roselle said he cannot do his job.

"I want to be a good president of the University of Kentucky and that can only be measured ... by the progress the University makes under my leadership," he said. "In order for the University to make progress I need some help to do that. I need some financial help. Unless I am making progress, unless I am being a good president I don't think the University is well served by my being here. Either we make progress or I don't see the point of the whole exercise."

Roselle said that state leaders must demonstrate that they are committed to funding the state's eight universities and 14 community colleges at higher levels.

"We don't have enough money to do the things we ought to be doing," Roselle said after the rally. "This thing is at a point now where it needs to be turned around and go a different direction."

UK has recognized the state's financial problems by asking for less money for the next two years, Roselle said, and therefore state leaders also should recognize the needs of higher education, he said.

Roselle said that he is concerned that the state's budget for the next biennium will not address higher education's needs, forcing the universities to endure even more difficult economic times.

"It is the anticipation of next year's budget," he said. "That in my opinion will be a really bad thing if we go through yet another biennium without any recognition of what the needs of the institution are. I actively seek out conversations about funding for the University of Kentucky. Sure, I'd welcome conversations with the governor or anyone else about what the funding of the institutions really are."

Roselle received one sign of legislative support yesterday when the Interim Joint Committee on Appropriation and Revenue of the General Assembly passed a resolution supporting him and promising to fight to fund higher education better.

Sen. Mike Moloney, chairman of the appropriations and revenue committee and the sponsor of the resolution, praised Roselle for his work at UK, saying the state could not afford to lose him.

"Dr. Roselle ... I will pledge to you that in 1990 I will do everything I can to get the money that this and every institution of higher education as well as other the institutions of government need to serve the people of Kentucky," said Moloney, D-Lexington. "It will not be easy. There will be obstacles to overcome, there will be ignorance to overcome, and we cannot do it without your help."

Roselle received support from other state leaders as well.

Frankfort's reaction will decide Roselle's fate

ANALYSIS

UK President David Roselle sent Frankfort a clear message yesterday: Either commit now to fund higher education adequately, or he's packing his bags for the University of Delaware if the university's board of trustees offers him its school's presidency.

Roselle, who is one of four finalists for the Delaware presidency, told reporters after a rally held for him by UK students, faculty and staff that he has reached the end of his rope at UK.

"I want to be a good president of the University of Kentucky, and that can only be measured, it seems to me, under the progress the University makes under my leadership," Roselle said. "Now if the University is going to make progress, I need some help in being able to do that — and I really do. I need some financial help for the institution. And unless I'm making progress, unless I can be a good president, I don't think the University is well-served by my being here. Either we make progress, or I don't see the point of the whole exercise."

Yesterday's rally largely was a last-ditch effort by the University community to show Roselle that what he is doing at UK is appreciated, but Roselle has known for a long time that the University likes him.

What he needs to hear in order to stay at UK is that the state's leaders are committed to giving higher education the support to operate at the level it wants.

Since coming to UK in July

1987, Roselle said he had been looking for commitment from the state to fund higher education adequately, but he said that he has seen few signs of it. Roselle said that he believes UK can help the state improve its economic and social conditions, but not unless it has the adequate financial resources.

"The University of Kentucky wants to be part of the solution, not part of the problem," he said. "And we need an opportunity to be able to do that, to be able to be the kind of institution we ought to be to help the state — that's all we're looking for. There's not a lot of self in this, it's just that you reach the end of the rope and say, 'We don't have enough money to do what we ought to be doing.' We're losing some faculty who I don't want to lose, and this thing is at a point now that it needs to get turned around and go a different direction."

Roselle also has to be frustrated at the lack of leadership in Frankfort. While some lawmakers have been rather vocal about higher education's needs, there still has not been a consensus to emerge from the state's Capitol.

Rather than talking about how to fund higher education, many lawmakers have been caught up in the politics of the issue, which is something Roselle said yesterday that does not care to become involved in.

"I don't do politics, I do education."

Wilkinson must decide on funding, leaders say

Some state lawmakers said yesterday that Gov. Wallace Wilkinson needs to take a positive stand regarding the issue of funding higher education within the next two weeks to keep UK President David Roselle from leaving the University.

"If his response is to say nothing or not going to supply the money then I think he's saying, 'The hell with higher education in the state,'" said Sen. Mike Moloney, D-Lexington. "I think it's time the governor spoke specifically to the question. He's got to quit hiding behind his press secretary. He was elected governor to make decisions, so let's let him make one."

Roselle is a finalist for the presidency at the University of Delaware in Wilmington. Roselle is scheduled to visit the school Monday and Delaware officials said that they will make a decision Dec. 14.

Moloney and other state lawmakers told Roselle at a rally held in front of the Administration Building yesterday, that they will lobby hard for additional funding for UK and for higher education.

"It will not be easy," Moloney said. "There will be obstacles to overcome and ignorance to overcome. Kentucky, not just UK, cannot afford to lose men of the caliber of David Roselle. We have enough problems in this state without having to worry about replacing our leaders, and David Roselle is a leader of this state."

UK political science professor Malcolm Jewell said Roselle has established a good working relationship with legislators that will help secure funding to finance the University and higher education.

"Over the long haul, if Roselle would have been willing to stay here for five or six years, he could have made good progress," Jewell said.

Even if Delaware does not select Roselle, Jewell said another institution that is better funded probably will recruit.

Lt. Gov. Brereton Jones said that the state has decreased the amount of funding for higher education during the last 10 years.

"In comparison with 1978 dollars, the state's contribution to higher education has declined 25.4 percent," Jones said.

Roselle said higher education's future rests with the governor.

"Hopefully, the loud cry for the funding of higher education will be heard and respected by the governor," he said. "The bottom line is that you don't get something for nothing."

If Roselle leaves UK, it will hurt higher education because he is its most vocal advocate, Moloney said.

If Roselle doesn't receive support from the governor, then "it's clear anyone else who is vocal will be run out of town too, and that's regrettable — very, very regrettable."

"The governor's got two weeks to demonstrate an interest in higher tion," he said. "And if I'm going to do education the politicians need to figure out how to get us some more money so that we can do it in an appropriate manner."

Part of that commitment Roselle is looking for from politicians came in the form of a resolution passed yesterday by the State Interim Senate Appropriations and Revenue Committee declaring their support to Roselle and their commitment to fund higher education.

Roselle said that the move by the committee was "just super," but he needs more signals before he is convinced that attitudes in Frankfort toward higher education have changed — especially from Gov. Wallace Wilkinson.

"I want people to say, 'We buy into what the University (is doing); we want to be a part of it,'" Roselle said.

One of Roselle's greatest frustrations has been the way Wilkinson has acted toward funding higher education. Since Wilkinson called the state's eight university presidents "cry babies" and refused to raise taxes to increase state revenues in the last session of the General Assembly, things have appeared to be tense between Wilkinson and Roselle at best.

And perhaps the prospects of having to lobby Wilkinson for just enough money to allow the University to continue to scrape by for another two years was enough to cause Roselle to look elsewhere for employment.

As one University official remarked earlier this semester, UK has been cutting the fat for so long that it is reaching muscle. Like many others at the University, Roselle feels that students and higher education have done their job in making up for the state's lack of funding. UK even scaled back when it made its request to the state this fall.

Although the University of Delaware may not rank high on many people's list in terms of noted academic institutions, it has one thing UK doesn't — money.

And Roselle was quick to point that out when asked by a reporter yesterday what is so attractive about a school that has a student body of less than half of UK's and a budget about one-third the size of UK's.

Delaware provides Roselle with the opportunity to achieve the kinds of things that will make him attractive to an Ivy League caliber institution.

Most people expected that Roselle would stay at UK for only about six years and then move on to a prestigious East Coast college.

And while at UK, Roselle hoped to turn a fairly good land-grant school into one of the nation's best.

If Roselle is not selected president by the University of Delaware — which there is still the chance — and decides to ride out the storm in the next General Assembly, it will be interesting to see what kind of commitment students show.

In the legislature's last session, students were virtually non-existent. But with the support students showed yesterday — more people attended a rally to keep Roselle than attended to keep former UK men's basketball coach Eddie Sutton — it would appear that students are ready to fight for higher education.

"As protest rallies go, this one seems a bit unusual in its character. This is not what you expect when the students show up at the administration building," Roselle told the crowd yesterday.

The University of Delaware's board of trustees hopes to choose a new president by Dec. 14, which gives Gov. Wilkinson less than two weeks to decide how to respond to Roselle's call.

But as State Sen. Michael Moloney remarked when asked if he thought Gov. Wilkinson would respond positively to higher education within the next two weeks, "I'm afraid not."

education in this state and I hope he demonstrates it positively," Moloney said.

Moloney and other officials said they do not believe Wilkinson supports higher education.

"I don't think the governor has a strong appreciation for higher education," said James Applegate, a UK communications professor. "He's politically ambitious and bought into the view that anyone who raises taxes won't go anywhere."

Although several UK administrators and faculty said that the University would be hurt if Roselle left, many said they understand his frustration with state leaders.

"You don't make any progress in any program unless you have the resources," said Vice Chancellor for Administration Jack Blanton. "I don't think Roselle came to the University to preside over its demise."

Faculty members said Roselle is being realistic about the University's financial situation, and that although they do not want him to leave, they said they will support his decision.

"If he has been convinced that there is no way to accomplish anything worthwhile at this University because he can't get the resources to do it with, then someone in the country looking for a top-rate president will realize he is a top prospect," Jewell said.

Applegate said students, faculty and the public need to express their feelings about higher education to Wilkinson.

"He needs to take a stand and let the people know where he is on this," Applegate said. "I don't think I've ever seen a person so apparently lacking in leadership potential, so totally dominated by self-side concerns when the state is in the shape it is."

"No matter how good of a communicator you are, if you are talking to someone who's blind, deaf and dumb, it does no good," Applegate said.

Many legislators and faculty said Wilkinson is more concerned with passing a succession amendment than he is with helping higher education.

Lawmakers said that Wilkinson will use succession as a bargaining chip to fund some of the state's agencies.

"If he did get succession, he would not comply with any promises he made to get succession," Moloney said, adding that most legislators are opposed to Wilkinson serving another term.

Exhibit captures essence of Eastern Ky. coal town

By KIP BOWMAR
Arts Editor

Haymon Ky., is one of many small Eastern Kentucky towns that draws its life blood from coal. That reality has greatly affected the art of David Lucas.

With a simplicity that matches the lives of the people there, Lucas has rendered a very real portrait of many coal towns. His works evidence a genuine feel for life, based on reality as opposed to stereotype.

None of the paintings have bold or bright colors that overwhelm the eyes from the first glance. They are simple, earthy tones that flush out the people in each of the 25 paintings.

Although all the paintings come from different time periods, they appear to be frozen in the same time era.

In many of the paintings, coal weaves itself into the background, such as his painting of a pastoral, stripped-down church. A close look reveals a coal truck in the background.

One of the most pertinent examples is of a woman, whose striking features have become slightly hardened by life in the mines. But the face is vigilant and unbowed, almost to the point of defiance.

That painting is in direct contrast to a portrait of an older gaunt miner whose face and hands show the lines of time. Although the miner came from the past in which conditions supposedly were more severe, it is easy to see the young miners ending up in the same condition in 20 years.

The pictures that depict people caught in action, however, are stiff and don't capture the feeling of the portraits. The people in motion don't flow as well.

Lucas also captures glimpses of the culture and surrounding scarred hillsides of Eastern Kentucky.

STEVE SANDERS/Kermel Staff

David Lucas shows the prevalence of coal in many Eastern Kentucky towns in his 25 paintings on exhibit at the UK Art Museum.

In one painting, a group of coal trucks are clustered together as a white cross in the background reads: "get right with God." Once again, the juxtaposition of religion and coal is interesting.

But Lucas is at his best when he captures the landscape and this is evident in two landscapes that appear to be similar but actually come from different parts of the day. The more the paintings are studied, the more the differences stand out.

David Lucas: Life in a Kentucky Coal Town will run through Jan. 21 at the UK Art Museum in the Otis A. Singletary Center for the Arts. The museum is open from noon to 5 p.m. Tue. through Sun.

STEVE SANDERS/Kermel Staff

David Lucas's paintings that attempt to capture people in motion appear stiff, but the rest of the works in the exhibit do an exquisite job of capturing the simplicity of the landscape and people.

Actors' to offer a 'Reckless' humor

By HUNTER HAYES
Staff Writer

The Actors' Guild of Lexington, Inc. will bring a production of Craig Lucas' off-Broadway play "Reckless" to Arts Place this December.

The play, directed by Ave Lwyer, provides a new twist on the yuletide theme.

Actor Vic Chaney describes the production as an atypical Christmas play.

"It's a dark comedy," Chaney said. "It's pretty funny at times, other times it is not. It's probably more comic than it is not."

The play opens with a woman confessing to her husband on Christmas Eve how much she loves Christmas. But her husband has something different to confess — he has taken a contract out on her life. The devoted wife and mother, Rachel, reacts by leaping through a window. Through the window, she begins a strange odyssey full of adventures.

The audience literally will be placed at the center of the play, thanks to a set that surrounds the audience, designed by John Holloway. Chaney said that this is the first time that the Actors' Guild has used a set like that.

Chaney said that this is the first Christmas play the group has ever performed. But they would have done the play even if they hadn't been able to secure the rights for the production in time for the holidays, Chaney said.

The fact that "Reckless" has been a challenge for the actors has heightened the Guild's desire to produce the play.

Seven actors in the play will assume approximately 15 roles. Chaney said that some of the 28 different scenes in the play will last just 30 seconds.

In its original run off-Broadway last year, "Reckless" enjoyed a grand success. Chaney said that he believes the Actors' Guild production also will be successful.

"I think it's going to be a big hit for us," Chaney said. "We've built up an audience that expects us to kind of do something different each time. I think they'll be happy with this."

"Reckless" will be performed Dec. 7-9, 14-16 and 21-23 at Arts Place. Performances begin at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at Arts Place, 161 North Mill St. Admission is $5 for students and senior citizens and $10 for the general public.

Talented cast wasted in 'Dads'

Lemmon's performance one bright spot in film

By ELIZABETH HAMMOND
Staff Critic

With a cast of Jack Lemmon, Olympia Dukakis and Ted Danson, among others, the newly released "Dad" should have been an exceptional film.

But due to a lengthy script and mediocre acting from the supporting cast, a film that could have been among the year's best succeeds only in being tedious and overwhelming.

Lemmon gives a performance that is vaguely reminiscent of Henry Fonda's last role in "On Golden Pond." His strength and charisma carry the film, and his gradual metamorphosis from a healthy, if somewhat senile, aging man to cancer victim is believable and tear-jerking. Lemmon is a veteran of the screen, and his acting expertise is, without a doubt, the salvaging factor of the movie.

On the other hand, neither Dukakis or Danson proves their worth. Danson should go back to "Cheers" and "Three Men and a Baby" roles where his ability to play a gigolo or an irresponsible bartender cannot be questioned. In "Dad," Danson attempts to play a role that would have been more deserving of Dustin Hoffman or James Woods. The burden of portraying a son who has to cope with his father's mortality and fear of growing old is too big for Danson to bear.

Dukakis also disappoints an audience that is accustomed to her more cogent performances, such as "Moonstruck" and the more recent "Steel Magnolias." She has a few good scenes, but they are only apparent when the cast works together for a rapport that gives glimpses of what this film could have been. At these times, she shines, but unfortunately these scenes are rare.

The plot is simple, yet stretched. It is the story of an older man who has lived his life as good provider for his family. Only toward the end of the movie, during a battle against cancer does he realize that there is more to being a father than providing food and shelter. His relationship blossoms with his son, Danson, when the roles of the two are reversed, and Danson has to care for his father after he undergoes his first surgery.

Director Gary David Goldberg, whose other work includes former NBC sitcom "Family Ties," effectively shows us a man growing closer to those he loves as his death draws near. He relays a message that it is never too late to mend family ties. But he also succeeds in creating a film that drones on and has the audience eager for the ending. Lemmon's character's health improves and fluctuates endlessly throughout the film.

Ethan Hawke, "Dead Poet's Society" fame, gives an endearing performance as Danson's son. Hawke lightens the mood in his few scenes and should be recognized.

UK must find another Claiborne to lead Wildcat football into '90s

With the passing of Jerry Claiborne's coaching career, college football has lost a unique individual.

Claiborne was not known for scholarly sayings, but he did encourage his athletes to be scholars.

Greg HALL

"I think that they broke the mold when they made Claiborne," UK President David Roselle said after the announcement.

"I don't know too many people who put as much emphasis on an education as he has," said Randy Holleran, a junior defensive back.

While Claiborne may not always have been the greatest coach on the field, he accomplished feats in the classroom that rival anyone Knute Rockne or Vince Lombardi accomplished on the field.

Claiborne was unselfish. He cared about his players and their futures to the point that he made disciplinary moves which possibly cost him the personal glorification from bowl games.

For Claiborne, a university was a place to learn. Football was just a game.

But now the search begins for a coach to continue those ideals. Many candidates have emerged, but none are exactly what UK wants. And it is unlikely that any of those possibilities will be wearing Kentucky blue next fall.

"The criteria for a successful athletic program is that it be fair to the student-athlete, that it be in compliance with the rules and regulations of the conference and NCAA and be competitive," Roselle said.

The three most likely candidates now are Roy Kidd of EKV, Howard Schnellenberger of Louisville and Mike Gottfried of Pittsburgh.

Roy Kidd: The veteran EKV coach has shown interest in the position, but it is doubtful that the interest will be seriously reciprocated. He has yet to prove his worth at the major college level and his age won't benefit a university that needs a fairly young coach who can spend his prime years putting UK in the national rankings.

Roy Kidd at UK would be similar to the final years of Adolph Rupp's basketball coaching career and the final years of Woody Hayes' football career with the Ohio State Buckeyes. Both of those coaches stayed in the profession beyond their times. And it forced them to retire with blemishes on prodigious careers.

Claiborne backed out of coaching before he had lost half of his marbles and did something damaging to himself and his University — just another indication of the quality person he is.

Howard Schnellenberger. The University of Louisville coach is in the same situation that he faced eight years ago when his alma mater asked him to head the program.

Schnellenberger has built U of L to a state of respectability in college football, which is something that the Cardinals could not maintain with Johnny Unitas at quarterback. The Cardinal program is reaching parity with UK. It would be illogical for Schnellenberger to make a lateral move in the coaching ranks.

But UK does have some perks that Schnellenberger cannot get at Louisville.

SEC coaches were 'shocked' when they heard of retirement

By CHRIS HARVEY
Senior Staff Writer

Sadness and shock were how many Southeastern Conference football coaches reacted to UK coach Jerry Claiborne's decision to retire from football Tuesday afternoon.

CLAIBORNE

"I'm shocked," said University of Alabama coach Bill Curry, whose teams are 2-0 against Claiborne. "I completely understand how he feels, though. He's a great coach and we'll sure miss him in our business."

"He makes our business worthwhile. He's a man I'd want my son to play for. I hate to see him get out, but he deserves to leave when he wants to."

Louisiana State University coach Mike Archer had mixed feelings about Claiborne's decision.

"I'm happy in the fact that he'll enjoy retirement with his wife," said Archer, whose team lost to UK 27-21 this season. "But I'm surprised and shocked on the other hand. He got the most out of his football teams, and his team always played hard against us."

"He's a real credit to the coaching profession. I really enjoyed my relationship with him, both as an assistant coach and as a head coach."

"I know what fans' expectations can do to a person, especially from where I'm at."

University of Georgia Athletics Director Vince Dooley said that Claiborne holds the respect of many of his coaching peers.

"He was a role model for the college coaches, and the coaching profession will miss him," Dooley said. "I have always respected Jerry Claiborne. He was a sound, fundamental football coach. He really made an exceptional contribution to the coaching profession."

University of Tennessee coach Johnny Majors, who only lost to Claiborne once, back in 1984, had similar things to say about Claiborne.

"He really distinguished himself as a leader in his profession both by the way he and his players handled themselves on and off the field," Majors said. "I have the utmost respect for him and his family."

Although Mississippi State University coach Rocky Felker never coached a game against Claiborne, he said he still has a good deal of respect for a man who spent eight years at the helm.

"He runs a first-class program," said Felker, whose team will play UK next season at Commonwealth Stadium. "He'll really be missed because of the examples he set for the rest of the league. He's one coach that I've got a great deal of respect for."

Lady Kats enter weekend game with 61-56 victory over Miami

By BOBBY KING
Staff Writer

Lady Kat coach Sharon Fanning has a problem that Rick Pitino would love to have: Her bench is lined with players that will be able to contribute to her team throughout the season.

"We expect everyone that dresses out to be in the game at some time," Fanning said. "It's a good problem to have a lot of people to play."

The 3-1 Lady Kats resume play tomorrow night when they meet Marquette University at 7:30 at Memorial Coliseum. The game with Marquette concludes a busy week for the Lady Kats, who won at Miami of Ohio 61-56 last night after losing at Ohio State earlier in the week.

Because of the team's frantic schedule, Fanning said she still has work to do in preparing for the Marquette game.

"We haven't had a chance to review the films yet, but we have someone scouting their game tonight," the third-year UK coach said. "I do know that they have a well-balanced team."

Despite Tuesday's loss to Ohio State, Fanning said she is pleased with her team's effort so far this season. "I feel very good about our progress," she said. "If this team can take a step forward in confidence and know they can win, then we'll be on our way."

Fanning said that a balanced scoring attack and some excellent play from younger players are giving the Lady Kats some hope this season.

"Right now we have six people scoring in double figures, which gives us good depth," Fanning said.

Leading the team in scoring is sophomore guard Kristi Cushmanberry, who also was the most valuable player in last weekend's Lady Kat Invitational Tournament. Cushmanberry also was the leading scorer on last year's team with an average of 12.9 points per game.

Fanning said that Cushmanberry's improvement is closely related to the improvement of Lady Kats. "She is getting better as she gets more confident in her team. She came up with some big buckets in the (Lady Kat Invitational Tournament)."

Also providing help are freshmen Josh Mills and Mia Daniel and sophomore Stacy McIntyre.

Fanning said that Daniel's play has been especially surprising. "She has been a pleasant surprise. She has done a good job defensively coming off the bench," she said.

But make no mistake, the Lady Kats have an ample supply of veterans who are effectively playing their roles as well. In particular, senior point guard Malinka Salhi has performed well so far this season. Fanning said Salhi has been running the offense well as of late.

"She has been pushing the ball down the floor and playing great defense," Fanning said. "She has also been taking better shots and getting the ball to the right people."

Fanning said that junior guard Tracey Davis and senior forward Vanessa Foster-Sutton played well enough in the LKIT to earn all-tournament honors.

The enthusiasm of the home crowds has been a plus for the Lady Kats in recent games according to Fanning. "The crowd is a big factor in our games. We need their support because it really makes a difference in our team," she said.

"Overall, I think we can win," Fanning said. "The most important thing is to get some more games under our belt and get the inexperienced players some more experience. If they have as much confidence in themselves as I do they'll be fine."

Football championships this weekend

By TED M. NATT JR.
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Pikeville football coach Hillard Howard said that his team's failure to break one state record earlier this season has put on the brink of busting another.

Pikeville opened the season with four straight victories to push its winning streak to 13 consecutive games — five short of Paris' state record of 38 straight — before suffering a 33-24 setback at Belfry in September.

But Howard said the loss brought the team together and made the players realize that the streak wasn't as important as winning a third straight state championship, something that no team has done in the 30-year history of the playoffs.

"We've been playing real well since the loss," Howard said. "It's a big deal for our kids to do something that's never been done in state history. To win three in a row would be unbelievable."

Pikeville (13-1) can achieve its goal by defeating Trigg County (13-1) in the Class A title game at Cardinal Stadium today. Kickoff is scheduled for 1 p.m. EST.

That will be followed at 4 p.m. by the Class AA final between Danville and Mayfield.

Tomorrow, Paducah Tilghman faces Fort Thomas Highlands Class AAA crown and Louisville Trinity faces Warren Central for the Class AAAA title.

Pikeville is led by quarterback Jason Howard, the coach's son, and running back Steve Bailey. Howard has passed for more than 2,000 yards and 26 touchdowns while Bailey has rushed for more than 2,000 yards and scored 34 TDs.

Paducah Tilghman is also making its third straight championship game appearance but has yet to come away with a state title. Covington Catholic beat Tilghman 16-6 in 1987 and 30-24 in overtime last year.

"The last two years we've played very well and got beat," said Tilghman coach Allan Cox, who won the state championship in 1985. "I think our seniors have a couple of bad memories they want to erase."

Tilghman has had a 37-6 record over the past three years, including a 12-2 mark this season.

"The seniors haven't been beaten many times," Cox said. "The only thing missing is the state championship."

Highlands (13-1) has won a record-tying nine state titles, but hasn't turned the trick since 1982. "That's what we're shooting for," Highlands coach Tom Duffy said, "but we'll have to play perfect football to do it. Tilghman has so much speed; they're capable of breaking the game open at any time."

Trinity, the defending AAAA champion, is the other team to have won nine state titles. But after losing 41 seniors from last year's 14-0 squad, including quarterback Jeff Brohm, Kentucky's Mr. Football, the Shamrocks weren't given much of a chance of repeating.

And yet Coach Dennis Lampley and his team will put their 27-game winning streak, currently the state's longest, on the line against Warren Central (13-1).

The Class AA final will be a rematch of the 1987 when Danville beat Mayfield 24-23 in overtime.

Senior Donnie Redd, a two-time All-State running back who has been converted to quarterback, leads Danville's offense, which is averaging 341 yards rushing and 37 points per game. Redd has gained 1,316 yards on 123 carries, an average of 9.9 yards per carry.

"I think the team that is most consistent along the line of scrimmage and doesn't turn the ball over will win, which is the way it should be when you get to this level," said Coach Sam Harp.

Mayfield (12-1) will counter with the Brown brothers. Freshman quarterback Ben Brown has completed 43 of 106 passes for 935 yards with 14 TDs and 10 interceptions. His favorite receiver is brother Beau, a senior who has caught 19 passes for 388 yards and seven TDs.

"We feel like we've played real sound defense all year long. Offensively, I think we've come on as the season's progressed," Mayfield coach Jack Morris said. "But we're going to have to play awfully well to beat Danville."

Chapman now displaying brilliance in NBA

By BILL BARNARD
Associated Press

NEW YORK — When the Charlotte Hornets made former UK star Rex Chapman the first draft choice in team history, they knew they were getting a raw talent who would have flashes of brilliance.

And flashes of ineptitude. The Hornets are struggling to win in their second year of existence, but Chapman, who played only two seasons at UK, is beginning to justify the confidence they put in him when he was made the eighth pick in the 1988 NBA draft.

Chapman has scored 18 or more points in eight of Charlotte's last nine games, averaging 23.1 points in that span and 20.9 overall while taking over the team scoring leadership from veteran Kelly Tripucka.

In a 119-108 loss to the New York Knicks Monday night, Chapman scored a career-high 38 points, many of them after a variety of swooping moves to the basket. He finished with a flurry, scoring 18 points in the fourth quarter.

"I was getting good screens, and the point guards kept getting the ball to me in good position," Chapman said. "I was getting my shots off quickly. I got in a rhythm and things began to flow."

"He took a couple of bad shots, but I love that. He took the ball at people," Hornets coach Dick Harter said. "There was one sequence when he took the ball to the basket three times in one possession despite getting his shot rejected. There were times last year when he didn't do that three times in a game."

Chapman said Harter has stressed the point in practice. "I didn't know what the NBA was about last year," Chapman said. "I know now that playing more aggressively is what I need to do. My confidence is up now. Last year was a learning experience."

Chapman still needs work on his shot selection, particularly in games when he's obviously out of synch. In one such game, an 85-81 loss to Houston last Friday, Chapman took 19 shots and made only two of them. Against New York, he made 17 of 32 attempts.

"Chapman was unconscious," New York coach Stu Jackson said. "He made a lot of tough shots. It had nothing to do with us. We challenged all his shots."

"He's a definite talent," Knicks guard Trent Tucker said. Chapman played 41 minutes against the Knicks, a pace made necessary by a groin injury to backup guard Dell Curry, who is on the injury list and has to miss at least three more games.

"He's going to play a lot of minutes for a while," Harter said. "But I don't expect to keep scoring like this," Chapman said. "I have to keep playing my regular game."

The son of Wayne Chapman, who played for UK, Denver and Indiana in the defunct American Basketball Association, Rex Chapman was groomed as a basketball player almost from birth. Highly recruited out of high school in Owensboro, Ky., he averaged 17.6 points in two seasons at UK.

With probation rumors running rampant, he left UK early and got his chance with the Hornets.

UK faces big decision in hiring new football coach

a 50,000 seat stadium to replace about 35,000 seat Cardinal Stadium. Commonwealth Stadium currently seats 57,800 and UK athletics officials are considering enlarging it into a horseshoe.

Schnellenberger was spoiled with the 81,000-seat Orange Bowl when he coached at Miami. He would be lucky to get 50,000 seats in Louisville and even that is doubtful.

The second perk at UK is that it is part of the Southeastern Conference. As a UK alumnus, a former UK assistant coach and a former Alabama assistant coach, Schnell-berger would be coming back to his roots and playing the competition that would bring his team to national prominence.

However, the conference perk did not work eight years ago and it will not this time either. Schnellberger is at Louisville until a Top 10 college team or the NFL knocks on his door.

Mike Gottfried, the last big-name possibility just may be the best. But he is equally unlikely to come south from Pittsburgh.

Gottfried has been under heat from the Pittsburgh media in much the same manner that was accustomed for UK basketball coaches who did not win National Championships yearly.

Still, UK would be a downward move for him. And coaches do not go to schools with less prestige, unless they are forced to. Gottfried has received pressure but probably not from the people who would fire him.

Ironically, the list of candidates is nearly the same as when Fran Curci left UK in 1981. Claiborne and Schnellberger were the two primary candidates and Gottfried and Ohio State's John Cooper were upcoming coaches next in line.

What UK wants is a Jerry Claiborne at Rick Pitino's age. But no one fitting that description has yet to make an appearance. In the rationalized search for another academic achiever, UK may end up with a coach that is not qualified enough on the field.

None of the most attractive candidates are likely realities at UK, sadly, and the next coach will not balance education and football like Claiborne did. As Roselle and others indicated, Claiborne's career was unique, but his successor probably will not be.

Rules concerning incomplete, repeat can be confusing

As the end of the semester draws near, it frequently becomes clear that our performance in a course or two might fall short of expectations and the resulting grade earned may be less than desired. Thoughts turn to the Repeat Option. Unfortunately, the University Senate Rules concerning repeat options are a bit complicated. More specifically, the deadline for filing the repeat option form can cause heartache and/or heartburn. Since grade reports are received a month or so subsequent to advance registration, the filing of the form often is forgotten. The best policy, of course, is to file the repeat option form at the time the student registers to repeat the course, whether that be during Add/Drop or during advance registration (for those certain of their demise). A quick primer on the repeat option rules is offered here:

1. A student may use the repeat option once for up to three different courses, with only the grade for the second completion of the course considered in the student's grade point average. If the repeat option is not filed, all grades for the course will be included in the GPA.

2. The repeat option may also be used for pass/fail courses. This is true even if the course was originally taken for a letter grade, although these rules can be confusing. A student should consult his or her academic adviser in these instances.

3. The deadline for filing the repeat option is no later than the last day to drop a course without a grade of any kind appearing on the transcript — Drop Day. The form must be filed in the dean's office of the student's college.

4. A withdrawal on the second attempt will exhaust the repeat option, if filed.

5. The repeat option may be filed only the second time the course is taken.

6. The repeat option may be exercised by special examination. Consult your dean's office.

7. Academic bankruptcy does not result in three additional repeat options being made available.

8. Attendance at a community college is the equivalent of attendance at the University for purposes of the repeat option.

Repeat options can be very useful remedies for sufferers of chronic or acute GPA illnesses. It is recommended that you know the rules before taking the cure. In addition, any decision to repeat a course should be discussed with your academic adviser.

The University Senate Rules concerning the assigning of an "I" grade are very short, simple and clear. Such a grade is to be assigned only:

√When a portion of the regularly assigned work for the course remains undone.

√There is reason to believe the work can be completed within the allowable period of time.

√It is reasonable to expect that a passing will result for the completion of the work.

√The reason for the student's inability to complete the work as scheduled is acceptable to the instructor. The allowable period of time for completion of the work, as proscribed by the Senate Rules, is 12 months after the end of the academic term for which the "I" grade was assigned. Any "I" grade not replaced by a letter grade within that time frame will be converted by the University Registrar to a grade of "E."

In addition, any "I" grade remaining upon a student's graduation will be converted to an "E," although the student still is granted 12 months following the term in which the "I" was awarded to complete the course and receive a grade change. It is also very important to note that the rules require a form be completed by the instructor and the student for each "I" grade assigned. This form is absolutely

Unfortunately, students and instructors alike often misuse the "I" grade. The "I" is not an alternative to an "E" or any other grade which the student finds unacceptable as the student will eventually receive either the grade he/she is attempting to avert or the automatic "E."

Many of the stressful situations created by students for themselves concerning "I" grades are the result of unrealistic expectations of what the instructor has the freedom to do under the Senate Rules. Clearly, the failure to complete the course requirements. Second, the student may have unrealistic expectations of his/her ability to complete the work within the twelve month period. Although the additional "breathing room" may appear to be the oasis in the desert to complete the work after the end of the term. This may be because of insufficient self-discipline, or it may result for the unavailability of the instructor or the fact that the student is no longer involved in the classroom situation for whatever reason, the twelve months pass very quickly.

Another innocent and fairly common mistake is the erroneous belief that an "I" grade may be removed by repeating the course and receiving a letter grade. Only if the Repeat option is filed will the second grade replace the "I." In all other cases, the second grade will be reflected in the transcript along with the "E," which results from the failure to remove the original "I." Obviously, it is much more desirable in most cases to complete the course requirement and remove the "I" than to repeat the course.

Although there are situations in which the "I" grade is the best alternative, students should be very familiar with the related rules and hidden pitfalls.

Student should be allowed to stay

In response to "Beijing sends China's best students to U.S. universities so that China will benefit from new technology. Therefore, it would be unfair to keep Chinese students in the United States," I would like to say to Ms. Manns that congresswoman Nancy Pelosi's bill (H.R.2712) does not "KEEP" the Chinese students in the United States, but merely stops the present immigration policy of forcing those Chinese students who have finished their study here to return to China under the current reign of terror. The Chinese students can and will always be free to leave the United States if they want, regardless of the passage of H.R.2717.

I believe that the Chinese government has nothing to complain about the United States adjusting its internal policy by adopting H.R. 2712. Instead, the current regime itself should be blamed for it. Under normal circumstances, the United States would honor its agreement (Fulbright exchange student-scholar program) with the Chinese government. This agreement is reasonable to prevent the "brain drain" from a third world country like China. But the situation in China now is anything but normal. The Chinese government has rolled back its reform policies and proceeded from massacre to executions, repression, round-ups, harassment, surveillance, re-education and extreme xenophobia — all cloaked in a dazzling display of the "Big Lie." It is therefore, this regime that fails to lure back its "best students" by violently cracking down on the democracy movement, by employing a fully-armed army against its own people and ordering it to shoot them.

The Chinese government is still waiting for the United States to honor its agreement by sending back those "best students." I don't think it deserves this treatment and I don't think this is the right time for those students to return home either, because their past activities in the United States will not be forgiven by the government.

More than 400 demonstrate support for Roselle

"I believe the legislature supports you and I implore you to stay with us here in Kentucky and we will help you get the funding for this University," said State Rep. Pat. Freibert, R-Lexington.

Lieutenant Governor Breerton Jones also promised Roselle that he would fight for higher education's cause.

"I'm here to tell you that the people of Kentucky love you and respect you and they are ready to support you and they are going to talk to their legislators," Jones said. "Those that have not yet been convinced I predict to you will be convinced to stand firmly in support of adequate funding for all education throughout this Commonwealth. If you stick with us and don't leave us, the future for Kentucky is very bright."

Even UK Athletics Director C.M. Newton begged Roselle to stay.

This president has set a standard that is national in scope," Newton said. "I was faced with major career decision some months ago. I made that decision after talking with President Roselle because he convinced me that I was not only wanted but that I would like to turn that around and say to Dr. Roselle... you are not only wanted but you are needed."

Those who attended yesterday's rally said that if Roselle left the University would miss his leadership.

"I am very concerned about this because I think Roselle has done a lot for the morale at this University as well as concrete things," said Becky Jordan, assistant dean of students. "He's just such a class act. I think this (the rally) is sending the message that he people at the University want David Roselle to stay and that we care about higher education because that's what he stands for."

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs James Kuder said that Roselle's departure would affect the morale of the University's faculty and staff.

"Look around here and see what this University is all about," Kuder said. "I was faced with major career decision some months ago. I made that decision after talking with President Roselle because he big blow to the faculty and staff. Without his leadership, I think we would be in big trouble."

"I am extremely concerned because I feel like this is very critical to the University and I hope all students are taking this seriously," said Luci Gutermuth, a psychology and English junior. "I think higher education is the issue and I think Dr. Roselle is a vital part of that."

The number of people at the rally showed how much the students support Roselle, said Student Government Association President Sean Lohman.

"I think he was amazed by the amount of student support that he has here," Lohman said. "I think that we effectively got our message across to him and hopefully he won't go."

"We were waiting to see which way the wind was blowing and obviously the student wind is blowing in the right direction," said Student Activities Board President Michael Bowling. "I think today we showed that we are here for the long term to support him."
