Through the Years

"Backwards, turn backwards, time in thy flight" and let's take a look at this ancient gridiron rivalry between Kentucky and Tennesse — a rivalry that began 49 years ago when the stalwart young men of the Blue Grass humbled the Orange-clad Tennesseeans at Knoxville by 56 to 0 before 4,000 fans, a record crowd in those days.

The annual battle between the football teams of these two great State universities has become traditional, yet despite their bitterness, there remains a feeling of deep friendship between Kentucky and Tennessee OFF the gridiron.

The Volunteers have won a majority of the games—we will let it go at that—but the Wildcats have nothing to be ashamed of in this hoary series. And, no matter which team is favored to win, the other frequently amazes the football world with a dizzy upset victory over the other.

Harken to a flashback of some of the spectacular Wildcat-Volunteer games of recent years.

The scene was the sunken bowl at Knoxville back in 1928 when a great team of Tennessee sophomores was blazing across the horizon. Kentucky, then coached by Harry Gammage, with Bernie Shively as his chief assistant, had lost to Northwestern, Alabama and Vanderbilt and was given no chance of upsetting the Vols. Yet, the hard-bitten Kentuckians, captained by Clair Dees, caused great grief in Knoxville that Thanksgiving Day by holding the Vols to a scoreless tie, although outplayed by the Orange.

The next year Tennessee, out for vengance, brought the famous "touchdown twins"—Gene McEver and Buddy Hackman—to Lexington, a stop-over while enroute (wishful thinking) to the Rose Bowl. It snowed that day, as many fans will recall, and the Cats, who had lost a thriller to Alabama, outclassed the Vols, who were fortunate to score a last-minute touchdown and gain a 6 to 6 tie. Will Ed Covington was captain of the Big Blue that year, and the Vols didn't get to play in the Rose Bowl.

Let's skip a year and see what happened here in Lexington on Thanksgiving Day 1931 when Big Babe Wright, one of the South's finest tackles, captained the Cats. This time, again, the Vols seemed a certainty for a Rose Bowl invitation. Once more the Tennessee lads dropped off in Lexington. They had one more game to play—with a powerful New York University eleven. The All-American halfback McEver was still playing with the Vols, who also boasted a great sophomore, Beatty Feathers, later to become an All-American back.

That game stands out in retrospect. Kentucky had lost close games to Duke and Alabama and had been tied by Maryland, while the Vols, as usual, had a clean slate. The odds were on the Vols by a big margin. But the odds overlooked the fact that Babe Wright would block one of Feathers' punts deep in Vol territory, and the odds didn't know that Dutch Kreuter, a fine Wildcat flankman, would pick up the ball and dash for a touchdown.

With a six-point lead, the Kentuckians battled gamely. Still they couldn't keep the Vols completely out of the picture, and a late rally netted the invaders a touchdown, with no extra point. Perhaps the outstanding feature of that game was Kentucky's last-quarter goal-line stand. The Vols had a first down within the Kentucky five-yard line. Two vicious lunges by Feathers and two by McEver left the ball still a few inches away from the stripes and once more the Vols left their Rose Bowl hopes one Stoll Field.

In 1935, with Chet Wynne as the Kentucky coach, the Cats overwhelmed the Vols for the last time. The score that day was 27 to 0 and that made the season a success for the Blue.

With one exception, since that time, Tennessee hasn't had a great deal of trouble with our boys on the gridiron. But there was a thrilling battle at Knoxville in 1936, which, according to the scoreboard and according to a disputed ruling by the officials, ended in a 7-6 win for the Vols. That was humdinger of a game. Kentucky scored first, then the Vols forged ahead on a touchdown and the extra point.

But the Cats weren't out of the game. Fleet Bob Davis came within an ace of placing Kentucky out in front just after the Vol touchdown when he took the kick-off and raced 70 yards only to be brought down on the Vol 30-yard stripe. Then, in the closing minute of play, Kentucky passed and ran for a first down on the Vol four. Three line plunges and it was fourth down with less than six inches to go. Bert Johnson, Kentucky's 210-pound halfback, who had been on the bench for ten minutes, was summoned by Quarterback Dick Robinson to make the final plunge. Victory was within Kentucky's grasp as the big Ashlander entered the game.

He grabbed the ball and, instead of plowing into the line, leaped over it, advancing the ball the length of his body across the line before the Orange wall surged back. The Kentucky fans were jubilant. They had seen Johnson carry the ball over the goal line before he was pushed back. But the officials were looking in some other direction. The ball was placed back to the spot where Bert had been pushed back—still four inches from the line, and the game ended 7 to 6 for the Vols.

But this is another year. The rivalry is just as bitter as ever. Maybe this time ——

Trick stuff is old stuff, Horatio. It just doesn't go any more. It's smart play that carries the ball these days. And that goes for clothing, as well as anything else. You'll find no tricks in our entire collection. Just good clean tailoring, sound design, and superlative fabrics. The only trick is in our ability to give real value at sensible prices.

The original "Betty Co-ed" was a student at the University of Tennessee.

It was back in 1794 that a young woman took a seat alongside men in a college classroom to inaugurate co-education in the United States. The college was Blount College, predecessor of the University of Tennessee. The student was Barbara Blount, comely daughter of Governor William Blount of "The Northwest Territory," which two years later became Tennessee. Hence the University of Tennessee was established two years before Tennessee became a state.

Even more democratic in its nature, the embryonic University of Tennessee was the first nondenominational college in America.

The University of Tennessee got its nickname—"Volunteers"—from the nickname of the state. Tennessee became known as the "Volunteer State" during the Mexican War when the War Department issued a call for 2,800 men and 30,000 eager soldiers volunteered for service.

Today the University of Tennessee is the keystone of Tennessee's educational system, consisting of eight major colleges and schools—each as large as the average "college" in the nation—and additional research and extension units. Its Agricultural and Engineering Colleges and its School of Home Economics have long been among the leaders of America. Also, its Colleges of liberal Arts, Law, and Education and its School of Business Administration and medical units have rated high.

Students in residence at the University of Tennessee number 4,435, including persons from 34 states, some from California, and three foreign countries. This figure does not include the thousands served by correspondence courses and extension projects.

The main campus of the University of Tennessee is located in Knoxville, in scenic East Tennessee. Less than a hundred miles to the east is the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, whose towering mountains and dashing streams attract hundreds of thousands of tourists each year. The main campus itself is located on a circular hill, some 40 acres in size, and students refer to the campus as "The Hill."

The University of Tennessee campus is considered one of the most beautiful in Amerca.
