Vol. VIII No.8

CKJA ANNUAL MEETING

CKJA's Annual Meeting will be held Sunday, Nov. 24 at 7 p.m. at ArtsPlace, 161 N. Mill St., Lexington.

The meeting will feature a review of 1985's accomplishments and the formal nomination of candidates for CKJA elections. There will also be a report on the General Assembly of the Council of Jewish Federations, which was attended by five representatives from CKJA.

Entertainment will be provided by local young Jewish musicians: Daniel Baer on violin, Ruth Belin and Andrew Diamond on piano, and Aron Friedman on French horn.

Nominating committee chairwoman Marilyn Moosnick and co-chairwoman Nancy Hoffman have announced the names of seven candidates for five positions on the CKJA board of directors. They are:

Michael Ades, member of Ohavay Zion Synagogue and Temple Adath Israel, past president of Ohavay Zion, trustee at Ohavay Zion, past co-chairman NCCJ, past board member of CKJA and past chairman of Men's Division. He is an attorney.

Stephen Bobys, a board member of CKJA Men's Division. He is an obstetrician-gynecologist.

Janice Brock, a board member of CKJA Women's Division and a participant in the Interact program for young Jewish leadership. She and her husband own the New Way Boot Shop.

Gloria Katz, the Association's incumbent president. She is also a former chairwoman of the General Campaign and the Women's Division Campaign. Gloria owns a public relations firm.

Erle Levy, CKJA's treasurer. He is a former chairman of the General Campaign and the Men's Division Campaign. Erle is a builder and contractor.

William Levy, who was ticket chairman of the 1984-85 Forum and a participant in the first CKJA mission to Washington, D.C. He is an anesthesiologist.

Joe Rosenberg, a member of the Association's Executive Committee and Super Sunday co-chairman for 1986. He is part of the Rosenberg family jewelry business.

Other nominations will be accepted at the meeting from any member of the Association so long as the nominee is eligible to serve and has agreed to serve. The nomination must be submitted in writing and be seconded by four other members of CKJA.

Within two weeks of the meeting a ballot will be sent to all CKJA members. To be counted, a ballot must be returned within two weeks of its being sent.

Introducing.....

David Green is the new Editor of the CKJA newsletter, taking over from Phyllis Scher, who spent four dedicated years as Editor.

David, 32, has been in Lexington for about a year and a half. He is City Editor of the Herald-Leader.

He and his wife, Libby Older, came to Lexington from New York, where he was with The Associated Press and she worked for the Federal Reserve Bank. Libby now teaches journalism at Transylvania University.

The community gratefully acknowledges Phyllis Scher's outstanding efforts. Under her direction, the newsletter has become an important source of Jewish community news in Central Kentucky.

We welcome David Green and anticipate a continuation of the high standards which have been set.

One People, One Destiny

In last month's bulletin we took an overview of the total CKJA campaign, "One People, One Destiny". By far the largest portion of our CKJA campaign income is allocated to the United Jewish Appeal, which in turn allocates a significant proportion to the Jewish Agency.

The UJA campaign combines fundraising for tzedakah -- care for the dependent, the weak, the aged, the handicapped -- with fundraising for the rebuilding of Israel as a Jewish homeland. This is done through the support of immigration and quality absorption of immigrants, as well as social and educational programs needed to strengthen Israeli society.

With our participation Israel has already absorbed wave after wave of immigrants, almost 2 million people, and established over 500 rural communities.

The Jewish Agency is committed to working with a totally balanced budget. Regardless of the need, the Jewish Agency cannot plan any program, no matter how vital, unless that program can be paid for with projected income.

At present Israel is in the midst of absorbing another large wave of immigrants, Ethiopian Jewry. This requires help from throughout the Diaspora, to aid in covering the costs of absorption centers and rent subsidies for permanent housing.

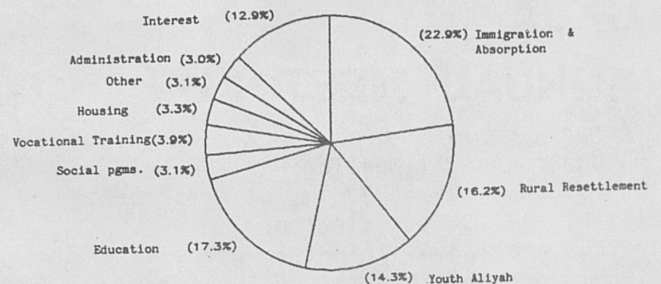

In addition Israeli society continues to face a major economic crisis. The Israeli Labour Ministry recently predicted that the unemployment rate will surpass 10 percent in March or April of 1986. An October issue of the Jerusalem Post reported that unemployment in Israel had climbed from 5.4 percent in January of 1985 to the present 8 percent.

The Jewish Agency has proposed a 1985-86 budget of $414,000,000 for: (a) Immigration and absorption, (b) rural settlement, (c) youth aliyah, (d) Jewish education, (e) higher education, (f) social programs, (g) vocational training, (h) housing,

(i) other functions, (j) interest and debt, and (k) administration, in the percentages indicated below.

Our support of the CKJA campaign plays a major role in this aspect of "One People, One Destiny".

1986 WOMEN'S DIVISION

The Women's Division held a Pacesetters luncheon on Nov. 22 at the Lafayette Club. Howard Stone, a former director of overseas programs for the UJA was the featured speaker.

Stone, who was also first director of the UJA's Young Leadership Cabinet, recently left UJA to become a consultant to travel companies, Jewish organizations and corporations doing business in the Middle East.

He has also served the Israeli government on various projects and has helped to smuggle Jews out of North Africa and into Africa.

Those making a minimum pledge of $500 to the 1986 CKJA campaign were invited to attend the Pacesetters event.

In charge of the luncheon were Arlene Cohen, chairwoman, and committee members Chris Eidelson, Marilyn Moosnick and Cheri Rose.

CKJA-UJA CAMPAIGN GUARDIANS OF ZION

Eighty members of the Central Kentucky Jewish community gathered on Sunday evening, Nov. 10 at Le Bistro's newly expanded facilities for the fourth annual Guardians of Zion dinner.

Rabbi David Saperstein, Director of the Religious Action Center in Washington, D.C., was the featured speaker.

Rabbi Saperstein's theme was the philosophy of Tikun Olam (perfecting the world). Toward that end there are three major principles on which to base our actions: Torah - Education, Avodah - Worship, and G'milut Hasadim - Good Deeds.

Rabbi Saperstein characterized many of our own CKJA programs such as the Forum, Camp Shalom and Shalom Lexington as positive efforts to educate our community to the importance of Jewish awareness and stronger unity.

In discussing Avodah - Worship, Rabbi Saperstein acknowledged the wide range of beliefs within Judaism both in the United States and in Israel. He made a strong plea for all of us to surmount intra-religious tensions both here and in Israel -- to work toward improved Synagogue/Federation relations in this country and for support of Reform and Conservative efforts to participate fully within the Jewish Agency system in Israel.

Finally he addressed the issue of G'milut Hasadim - Good Deeds. He included both support of Israel and working for eradication of universal social and human concerns such as hunger, poverty and unemployment.

While lauding Jewish efforts on behalf of Ethiopian and Soviet Jews, Rabbi Saperstein urged us to view them in a broader context of human welfare and human rights.

Rabbi Saperstein concluded with a charge to work to change the world and to be proud that our efforts are directed toward human betterment. If we do not work for change we will be changed, becoming less sensitive to the needs and welfare of our fellow human beings.

The response from those present was enthusiastic and concrete. A combined total of over $170,000 was pledged to the Men's and Women's Divisions of the 1986 Campaign.

*****PROFILES *****

This month the CKJA bulletin begins a series of profiles of Soviet Jews who have been denied permission to emigrate. The profiles are based on information provided by the South Florida Conference on Soviet Jewry.

Dmitri and Tamara Golenko were so desperate to leave the Soviet Union that in 1976 they moved from Moscow to the city of Tashkent -- more than 1,500 miles away -- in hopes that it would be easier to emigrate from there.

In 1979, the Golenkos along with their son and daughter-in-law applied to emigrate. But while their son, Konstantin, and his wife were allowed to leave, the elder Golenkos were not.

Dmitri Golenko was born with the name Ginsburg in 1932. But he was denied admission to a university in 1951 and told he would never be admitted with such a Jewish-sounding name. After changing his name to Golenko, he was admitted to Moscow State University, where he received a doctorate in applied mathematics.

He eventually became a professor at the Moscow Institute of Economics and Statistics, a post he held until 1976.

Golenko got a teaching job at Tashkent, but lost it as soon as he applied for a visa. The visa was rejected without official explanation, but he was told: "We are not so rich that we can afford to get rid of scientists."

Letters to "refusniks" can be invaluable in lifting their spirits. Letters to the Golenkos may be addressed to:

COMMUNITY RELATIONS UPDATE

Vigorous activities by the Community Relations Committee and the Faculty Association on Jewish Affairs at U.K. have resulted in approval of an "excused absence policy" at the University which is sensitive to religious differences. For many years the University did not have a policy which specified what was considered an excused absence from class. After much study, a university committee proposed that only death in the immediate family, physician-documented illness and university-associated activities be considered valid reasons for absence.

When this proposed policy was circulated to the faculty, David Wekstein and Ken Germain, as chairmen of the Community Relations Committee and the Faculty Association on Jewish Affairs (FAJA), co-signed a letter to all Jewish faculty requesting they speak to the senators from their colleges asking them to support a proposal to include religious holidays as a valid excused absence from class. The letter also requested that faculty members go to the senate meeting and express their concern about the proposed policy.

At the meeting of the senate there was enough discussion and controversy over the motion that the senate tabled the issue for later discussion.

The senate council (the governing body of the university senate) asked if the FAJA would draft its suggestion for an absence policy. Under the guidance of Historically, there's always been a place for Jews in the Soviet Union. In prisons, labor camps and exile.

Today, despite great changes in the Soviet Government, very little has changed for the Soviet Jew.

Jewish homes are routinely ransacked by Soviet Authorities. Jews are sent to prison on trumped-up charges. And while emigration has dwindled to a trickle, many of those still bold enough to apply for exit visas are arrested by the KGB and shipped off to labor camps.

Despite international agreements freely entered into by the Soviets, which guarantee basic human rights, the rights of Jews in the Soviet Union are frequently and flagrantly violated.

Are we to believe the current Soviet regime is committed to world peace when it shows such blatant disregard for human rights?

Today, as President Reagan meets with Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze, we call on the Soviet Union to honour its pledge to end the persecution of two and a half million Soviet Jews.

If the Soviet Union wants credibility at the bargaining table, let them earn it.

TOURISM DEVELOPMENT IN ISRAEL

Sfad, Israel -- Seeking to build on nature's blessings of majestic mountains and the serene Sea of Galilee, the Jewish Agency settlement department plans to develop Israel's upper Galilee as a major overseas vacation center.

Moshe Gourellick, the Agency's upper Galilee settlement director, said that 10 to 15 tourism-based Moshavim in this ancient city of 50,000 current residents could be started in the next five years, "more if funds are available".

"Our budget is $16 million and we initiate two to three new settlements a year," said Gourellick, whose region encompasses 400,000 acres west and south of the border with Syria, well within Israel's pre-1967 borders. "For each additional $1-1.5 million, we could initiate another settlement. We could put $9 million more to work within a year if we have it."

Gourellick said tourism's development in Sfad would provide jobs for farm-reared youngsters without non-agrarian skills; diversify Israel's northern economy, which is increasingly high-tech west of there and north of Haifa; increase Jewish population in Israel's north, down to less than 50 percent even counting the heavily-Jewish cities of Nahariya and Acco; and encourage Israelis to vacation and spend disposable income at home.

Nearly all the 150 Galilee settlements, including 50 under Agency care, have a mix of economic activity, but overall the economy of the Moshavim is agricultural.

The region's tourism prospects include the Sea of Galilee, ideal for boating and beachfront development, and framed by beautiful mountains amenable to hiking, climbing, picnicking and horseback riding. Year-round temperatures are usually brisk to warm and, Gourellick noted, "there is no rainfall from Pesach through Succot."

American Jews can help convert blueprints into a vacation dreamland by contributing to the Jewish Agency settlement department through the United Jewish Appeal/Federation Campaign, the main source of Jewish Agency funds. Perhaps many of them will come here to vacation, in time, and will be able to say proudly, "I helped make this dream come true."

CLOSE TO HOME

Think of Hasidic Jews and you might think of Brooklyn or Jerusalem. But Rabbi Avrohom Litvin is giving Kentucky Jews reason to think again.

Rabbi Litvin, a member of the Lubavitcher Hasidim, arrived in Louisville earlier this year to make Kentucky his home.

Rabbi Litvin is part of a nationwide effort by the Lubavitchers to foster "an increasing, deeper appreciation of Judaism" among all types of Jews, from the least observant to the most traditional.

"Sometimes it means making a children's program, trying to get an excitement to Judaism; somedays it means speaking to a runaway, trying to get her to go back home; one day it means speaking to a Russian immigrant trying to bolster his Jewish feeling."

Rabbi Litvin says he gets invitations to speak and has done so in Lexington. But because he is a rabbi without a congregation he sometimes has to make his own "pulpit".

In that spirit, he rigged up a truck as a "Sukkot-mobile" and drove it to Lexington to help Jews here celebrate that holiday.

In fact, he says he will do "whatever it takes to reach out to someone and say 'I'm Jewish, you're Jewish, let's be Jewish together'."

Rabbi Litvin said he doesn't see his role as trying to "convert" other Jews to Hasidism -- an effort the Lubavitchers undertake in varying degrees elsewhere. And he says that Chabad - the name of his group - reaches out to anyone who is Jewish.

"We drop terminologies," Rabbi Litvin says. "We try not to look at reform or conservative or orthodox, but rather Jew to Jew, the essence, the core."

"There's more to what makes us special than separates us. Every Jew can do more, I can do more, you can do more, we can do more together."

Nonetheless, there are some things that make Rabbi Litvin different from the typical Kentucky Jew. Because he is a strict observer of Jewish law, for example, he will not shake hands with a woman.

But, he says, "Because I won't come to their house for supper and I won't shake their hand, doesn't mean we can't be friends."

Rabbi Litvin said he would be hard-put to concisely describe the difference between a Hasid and an orthodox Jew. He says that in general a Hasid is "somebody who goes above and beyond the letter of the law. If the law demands X and he gives X and Y, this is called a Hasid."

The Lubavitcher group has its headquarters in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn, N.Y., but it has established operations throughout the country.

Kentucky is the 38th state in which Chabad has established itself, Rabbi Litvin says.

While he says he doesn't find it difficult to maintain an observant life in Louisville -- there is a butcher, a baker and mikva -- "There is definitely a change, there is culture shock."

"But then again, the people are here and Judaism doesn't end at the Hudson."

Rabbi Litvin, who will say only that he is in his late '20s, lives in Louisville with his wife, Golda, their toddler son, Shmula, and newborn son, Chaim.

He grew up in Boston and was educated in Canada, New Jersey and New York. His wife is from Pittsburgh and is also very active in Chabad's new work in Kentucky.

The Litvins, the rabbi says, intend to make Louisville their home -- at least "temporarily until the Messiah comes. It's not that long."

BOLIVIAN CITY ELECTS JEW

La Paz (JTA) - A Jewish legislator, Jose Brecher, has for the first time become a member of the Bolivian Chamber of Deputies, the World Jewish Congress reported recently.

According to the Latin American branch of the WJC, the 31-year-old Brecher, whose father is a Holocaust survivor, was elected with both Jewish and non-Jewish votes in the city of Cochabamba. In all of Bolivia the Jewish population does not exceed 1,000 persons, and there are small communities in La Paz, Cochabamba, and Santa Cruz de la Sierra.

Brecher has publicly taken positions in favor of Israeli causes. He chaired the Keren Kayemet in Cochabamba and initiated the planting of a Bolivia forest in Israel.

Brussels (JTA) - King Baudouin of Belgium recently appointed a Jewish diplomat to serve as "Grand Marechal de la Cour", the equivalent of Chief of Protocol of the Royal Court and head of the King's civil list and court administration.

Sylvian Frey, 62, a member of a Jewish family in Antwerp, was appointed to what is one of the highest official posts in the country. He will assume his post in December.
