Dear Miss Beatrice Angles, Thank you very much. It would have been very pleasant (if it is grammatical to speak so of a future time)
to have been with you on the 22nd, & to have met again M^r.
Conroy Grain, whom I have the pleasure of knowing. (Perhaps you know that he is a University man? At one time he was reading for the Bar, but I fear I can't come at that time, whether I can come at another

time I do not yet see,
but hope to find some opportunity, & remain yours affectionately

Dear Miss Beatrice Argles,

Thank you very much. It would have been very pleasant (if it is grammatical to speak so of a future time) to have been with you on the 24th, & to have met again Mr. Corney Grain, whom I have the pleasure of knowing. (Perhaps you know that he is a University man? At one time he was reading for the Bar.) but I fear I can't come at that time. Whether I can come at another time I do not yet see, but I hope to find some opportunity & remain yours affectionately

DODGSON, CHARLES LUTWIDGE ["Lewis Carroll"] (1832-1898). Author and mathematician. Oxford.

A.L.S. to Miss A. Beatrice Argles.
22 Mar. 1879. 2p. (double sheet, 12mo.)
With envelope.

A typical letter to one of his bevy of little girls: Dodgson is sorry he cannot come to see "Mr. Corney Grain," on whose name he makes an outrageous pun.
