

London.

Oct 24th 1878.

Dear Sir

I should be charmed to avail myself of your very kind hospitality, but fearing that it may be rather awkward owing to the peculiar circumstances of my visit. I beg of you to excuse me. Each evening is engaged at some town or another, and I have a colored stranger, and

Robt. Bowyer Esq

of the learned places in England, I should say that the Lecture "The Dark Continent and its people," or "Africa & the Africans" would be the most appropriate to deliver there, but if you think that the narrative will have more popular interest, I leave it to you to decide. A letter addressed before next Friday and, ~~Monday~~ Tuesday the 29th to Newstead Abbey
Nottingham will find me.

Yours with many thanks

Henry Westlake

servant, to look after, and unfortunately my English servant does not understand the colored man's wishes.

As I have only one evening at Cambridge, can you not make it a dinner only at your house, when I should be extremely happy to meet you & your friends.

I should also be delighted to have Dr. Humphreys occupy the chair.

By the bye as I have two lectures prepared and as Cambridge is one
