

Temple, 22 November, 1836

Sir,

I have depend on abundance of your very welcome and flattering letter and of the favour with which it was accompanied, which I have been able to put by myself by the favour of the your letter; and I express very much the ungenerous suspicion which presented me with now from having had received. It has, I believe, been one of no common kind; - the work is conceived in the high and pure spirit - and executed with great beauty and power; - and I trust its receipt will encourage to proceed in the course you have so well begun. For myself, I entertain only very slight hopes of equal success to the delight of personal composition; and in begging your acquiescence of the copy of "Ira", offer you the first, and I fear the only copy, which is in dramatic parts. Believe me, very faithfully yours

Thomas Comack Esq.
