

5. Cheyne Row, Chelsea

3 March, 1853 -

Dear Doyle,

The Prints, concerning which Lady Arden wrote to you, are at length come: I have them now by me (for they have been brought hither by a kind of mistake), but I have not yet looked into them. The question is now, when can you come to give your judgement?

By way of saving time, and perhaps other trouble, I propose at once, that you visit me on Saturday at 3 p.m. at Betty House, where Prints,

Philips's list, and all other useful apparatus shall be (even a fire in the room is bespoken, and the servant is warned to expect us if he hear nothing to the contrary), — and I should think we might, in no long period, get thro' this little bit of business.

Saturday at 3 h. m. for us, though it suit you: if that do not suit, then please ap-point another time, — any other, — and I will try to keep it.

If I hear nothing, I shall summon you on coming; but it will be more satisfactory

if you write —

Believe me

Yours always truly

J. Carlyle
