

the change of Editorship. You can puff me to your heart's content. The Globe has stumped for it all.

Will you bring out the notice into you on Tuesday? I will then give it to Moran. I enclose you proofs of "Jack." - We are waiting for Dickens's article. The Hawk leaves are kept ^{reserved} for him.

I will send you a copy for the Courier, and Fort Journal (where Sloper, also, you will give me a lift,) on Tuesday.

And, and, my dear

Kensal Lodge, Harrow Road.

Friday Night.

My dear Blanchard,

I called to day to thank you for your kindness, (which I shall not readily forget,) but was not fortunate enough to find you at home. Accept my warmest thanks. If your friends confer a personal obligation on you in obliging ^{me} you, what must my sense of obligation be towards you! I leave your warm heart to conceive and estimate my gratitude.

Your affectionate

so curiously and cleverly varied that (I hope, with no breach of ^{confidence} propriety) I could not help reading them aloud to the ladies here, who were quite as much delighted and entertained with them as myself. -

You will find it no success to grant favours. With all the weight of those just received upon me, I am about to ask another. Will you write me a notice of the next vol. of "Sack," for the Globe? Moran is a very obliging fellow, and will insert anything I send, but he cannot, or will not write the ~~article~~ ^{article} himself. Now, you can do this (by my soul, I don't flatter you,) better than any one else. And I don't want a notice so much, as a judicious stringing together of extracts. The space he allows me is a column. Both the previous numbers, I should tell you, have been very favourably reviewed in the Globe. But I should like the present to be noticed chiefly in connection with

Blanchard, seriously, - after asking all these favours of you, I shan't be easy till you ask something of me. I am bawls oblig'd to you: but obligations should not be always on one side. If you won't tell me how, I cannot find out some means ~~myself~~ for expressing my gratitude in any manner.
Ever lives with me on Tuesday and Janu. The first was at 24 Charles Street, Dorset Street. The last at 4 Squire's Inn Fleet Street.
I mention this, because if

You three choose to come out together, you can ~~so~~ easily arrange it. I have asked the Rev. R. Barham and his son, Lendon, Moran, W. Morgan, and Bentley.
~~They~~ ~~will~~ ~~with~~ I fancy unite their forces - though I desired ~~that~~ Bentley to bring you out. If you decide upon coming ~~with~~ with Bentley, drop him a note to say so.

I should like to have the notice for the globe on Tuesday - because if I give it to Moran myself, I can make sure of its insertion. You have full license, I repeat, to make it as eulogistic as you please.

Always Yours
Fideliy and Obediently
W. Harrison Cusworth.

Bring the sheets with you - with the extracts ~~not~~ marked.
