

Acting In 'Ah, Wilderness' Termed Mediocre

By GURNEY NORMAN
EDITOR'S NOTE—This review was written after the author saw Tuesday's dress rehearsal.

The program for Guignol Theatre's production of "Ah, Wilderness," a comedy by Eugene O'Neill which opened last night, admits that this is not a great play. And neither is the acting "great." But because greatness is missing from both levels does not mean that "Ah, Wilderness" is not good theater and good entertainment.

The first act is the weakest part of the whole play as Guignol has interpreted it. There are several reasons for this.

One is that Mr. O'Neill has simply presented a hard problem for actors to handle, that of a large Connecticut family beginning another day together, which in this case happens to be July 4, 1906.

O'Neill has called upon the actors to be excited about the holiday, each member with his own personal reaction to the day and, in particular, all the family's reaction to son Richard's rebellious attitude toward everything.

Scene two of act one was especially difficult, in which an extended evening meal is eaten, interrupted by the drunken oratory of Uncle Sid Davis, the lovable black sheep of an otherwise morally-Victorian family. The scene required that the actors be highly amused for several minutes at Sid's antics.

Though difficult, we cannot place the blame for this scene's near-flatness upon the author. From the audience it appeared that the cast was admitting the scene was difficult, too hard to become enthusiastic about, which resulted in poor timing of lines and less than convincing movements about the set.

None of the family seemed at home on the set. The actors moved as if they were in a china shop. They were tense at the dining table. Don Galloway approached doors as if he were afraid of them. Phillips Brooks laughed as if he felt obligated to.

Conversation earlier between Olive Morgan as Mrs. Miller and Ruth Barrett as her sister-in-law Lily was like a long-distance phone call, each waiting unnecessary seconds after one had spoken before the other spoke her next line.

But the mood and tempo of the action is lifted quite nicely when Nat Miller, portrayed by Phillips Brooks, sinks to his chair upon learning of his son's escapades through an anonymous letter. Sid Davis, the black sheep of the family played by Wallace Briggs, director of the Guignol Theatre, examines the note. "Ah, Wilderness!" opened last night and will run through Saturday. Curtain time is 8:30 o'clock nightly.

Med School To Offer Behavioral Sciences

Included in the UK Medical School's recently announced first year curriculum are 48 hours devoted to study under a Department of Behavioral Science.

Although many of the over 80 medical schools throughout the United States have been active in the behavioral sciences for the past 10 years, UK's Medical Center is one of only four or five schools that actually have a department devoted to such study, according to Dr. Robert Straus.

Dr. Straus is a professor of Medical Sociology and chairman of the Department of Behavioral Science.

According to the first year curriculum, the 48-hour unit on behavioral science "will provide a synthesis of concepts and principles from the social and psychological sciences essential for an integral study of human behavior in general and of human response to illness specifically."

In a paper published in The Journal of Medical Education, Dr. Straus outlines the application of a general program of a Department of Behavioral Science as follows:

1. Behavior in relation to the natural course of disease.
2. Health needs of society.
3. Understanding the basic structure of a society and the nature of human relationships.

Dr. Straus said that some questions

Medical Center Architects Say Firm Being Underpaid

Architects for the UK Medical Center say the state legally owes them $550,000 more for their work than they're being paid.

Hugh Meriwether, head of Meriwether, Marve and Associates, personally delivered to Frankfort a 10,000-word report concerning the claimed fees.

Copies were delivered to offices of Gov. Bert Combs, Atty. Gen. John Breckinridge, Auditor Joseph Schneider and Finance Commissioner Robert R. Martin. None of them commented on the report.

Auditor Schneider charged in an audit report on May 9 that the Lexington firm was being improperly paid $520,265 in fees.

This drew quick fire from Meriwether who charged the audit was motivated by a "mass of innuendo and lies."

He modified his ire in the written report saying he was convinced that the report was "merely wrong."

Meriwether claimed in the report that his firm saved the state $68,000 instead of costing it the unnecessary fees charged by Schneider.

He based his reasoning for this savings on a contract revision which lowered the original overall bid on the Medical Center from $20,274,724 to $20,206,669.

The claim for the $350,000 was based on what Meriwether called "fair and legal" entitlement to an increase in fees of more than 100 per cent due to additional work and expenses.

"Therefore," the report outlined, "the state under the increased fees is actually paying us approximately $350,000 less than we are entitled to, and approximately $175,000 less than we requested instead of the approximately $500,000 more than the audit states we are entitled to."

Claiming his firm would only get about four per cent of the construction cost of the Medical Center, the report pointed out that the American Institute of Architects sets a minimum fee of six per cent plus the cost of all consultants and full-time supervision or inspection.

Had these recommendations been followed, the report said, the firm's fee would have been close to 10 per cent of construction costs.

Meriwether said his firm had nothing to do with cost estimates of the Medical Center, claiming they were written into the contract by the University before the contract was presented to the architect.

The architect said he would like to meet with Gov. Combs soon and discuss all details concerning the Medical Center.

Khrush Denounces Eisenhower As 'Thief'

PARIS, May 18 (AP)—Nikita S. Khrushchev denounced President Eisenhower anew today on the issue of aerial spying and snubbed the American leader in a round of Paris farewells.

Likening Eisenhower to a thief, the Soviet Premier scowled and thundered about the dead Summit Conference, the Berlin problem, the U2 incident, and other issues.

Before 2,000 newsmen from East and West, Khrushchev suggested it might be well to take alleged American aggressors "by the scruff of the neck . . . and give them a little shaking."

Khrushchev blamed the President for the summit collapse, blasted his policy on intelligence flights, accused him of deceit, and called him a fishy friend.

He asserted that the U2 spy plane incident, on which Eisenhower ignored his demands for an apology and punishment of the responsible Americans, convinced the Russians the Berlin problem must be approached with "resolve and urgency."

He threatened new efforts to squeeze the Western powers out of West Berlin. He said a Soviet-East German peace treaty depriving the United States, Britain, and France of their garrison rights will be signed "when we consider the time is ripe."

Khrushchev was booed by hostile Frenchmen in Paris streets as he made his farewell calls on British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan and French President Charles de Gaulle.

He met a mixed reaction later at the news conference in the summit press center at the Palais de Chaillot.

Khrushchev called it to give his version of the reasons for the summit fiasco.

And, expectably, he saw in this a gigantic propaganda platform, a worldwide forum for his arguments.

A gigantic room, longer than a football field, was jammed with correspondents of many different nationalities. Klieg lights poured fierce incandescence on the raised stage. TV cameras relayed every nuance of Khrushchev's face and voice.

Boos and applause, cheers and groans punctuated his 2-hour, 20-minute appearance before the newsmen.

Khrushchev had the stage all to himself as the Western leaders remained in the background. Eisen-

"Listening to and Looking at Russia" will be the SUB Topics program narrated by Robert P. Moore, instructor of Russian, at 4 p.m. Monday in the SUB Music Room.

Mr. Moore said the program will have two purposes: to acquaint people with what is involved in the study of the Russian language and to familiarize them with other aspects of Russia.

He added that he wants to make known to students the pleasure that can be derived from studying Russian language and literature.

Claude Sullivan, announcer for radio station WVLEK, will show color slides taken in Russia during his recent trip to the country. Mr. Moore will play recorded Russian folk music and answer questions from the audience concerning the study of Russian.

Only Time Will Tell Winner Of Summit That Barely Started

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
PARIS, May 18 (AP)—It may be months before the West can make an adequate assessment of the factors behind the explosion as the summit in Paris. And only time may tell whether East or West—if either—is a winner over the other.

Nikita Khrushchev's violent diatribe before the world's press today presented a frightening spectacle for an already jittery world. It suggested that the Soviet Premier felt an urgent need to lower the cold war temperature. It suggested also that Soviet-American crises, edging to the brink of disaster and then easing off, may be expected over a long period.

There was more than a hint of a return to Stalinist foreign policy in Khrushchev's performance. This would augur a fortress of world Communism, furiously building its power and using dangerous tensions as political weapons elsewhere in the world.

Gloowering down at massed representatives of the world's press, Khrushchev fired a fistful of verbal thunderbolts. He waved his arms as he poured a torrent of insults upon U.S. leaders. He grinned and grimaced and scowled menacingly, like a man given an assignment to carry out and determined to give the utmost satisfaction.

There was nothing essentially new in what Khrushchev said. But the way he said it was menacing. And all together, it strengthened the impression that he had been prodded into this unprecedented, supertruculent posture.

Those in the Kremlin doing the prodding—and the finger of suspicion points to old line Stalinists supported by resentful army officers—apparently still do not want to turn the cold war into a hot one.

Guignol Play Entertaining

Net two opens with Carole Martin as Belle, a prostitute, attempting to ply her trade on young Richard (Don Galloway), who is drinking in a bar in reaction to a troubled romance.

Miss Martin's manner with her hands and eyes is honest and believable, and when she registers anger, she does it well, though some of her other lines sound memorized. She is too heavily made-up, even for her particular role.

She and Galloway work well together through this scene, he as an innocent trying to conceal his innocence, she showing just enough sympathy for Richard to keep her from being a stereotype.

Olle Morgan begins to redeem herself in act two after the slow first act. Miss Morgan has a natural inflection in her voice that is most appealing and that fits well with the character of Mrs. Miller.

As the play progresses, the range of the Mrs. Miller character extends and requires more extremes of mood, such as worry or positive contentment, and Miss Morgan seems better at either extreme than on the middleground of a woman routinely running a household.

Here, too, Phil Brooks seems more at home in his role as a post middle-age newspaper editor who must as another duty function as head of the Miller household. Brooks handles his part satisfactorily. He makes few slight mistakes and no flagrant ones.

Although he very much looks his part, there seems to be lacking a decisiveness about his interpretation of Nat Miller that I feel a Nat Miller would have, some final air of 1906 Victorian family authority that would show through the human warmth of an essentially good person.

Wallace Briggs, recreating his role of Sid from the 1942 original Guignol production of "Ah Wilderness," may have found a strength in what at first appears to be a weakness.

Without consideration, Briggs may be accused of lacking vitality, but it is just this quality that makes Briggs Sid Davis. For Briggs contributes just enough to his part without trying to dominate a scene with "ham," which the part would easily lend itself to.

His actions and mannerisms, his open mouth as he drunkenly dozes, his subdued, intoxicated staggering, and general consumptive appearance nicely complete one of the play's most appealing characters.

Don Galloway as Richard almost destroys the illusion that he is only a high school senior at times, especially when he appears on stage in an adult-looking house robe.

But his delivery of the endless quotes of romantic poetry is full of admirable comic seriousness, and the fluctuation of his character between simple boy and intelligent rebel is natural, enhanced by an appealing teen-age slouch and occasional stammer.

Ruth Barrett has to spend many minutes on stage without speaking, but she manages to effectively appear natural in her silent sitting.

Lamar Herrin as Richard's older brother, Arthur, achieves an authentic pseudo-mature smugness which the part calls for. John Pritchard looks exactly like David McComber should look, and he is genuinely funny just walking onto the stage. But his vocal delivery hurts his effectiveness because he does not seem in full control of what he is trying to say.

Phillip Cox is mis-cast as the salesman in the bar, and his monotone speech makes him sound hypnotized.

Daniel Howell, as eleven year-old Tommy Miller, handles himself on stage nicely, but he needs laughing lessons, as does most of the cast.

I was sorry Muriel McComber was not more prominent in the plot so we could have seen more of Lucy House's acting, and the same can be said for Thelma Burton as Norah, the maid.

One will remember Doug Roberts' brief appearance as Wint Shelby, the college sport, because, as always, there is no reluctance on the part of Roberts to get his job done. But he could use another rehearsal or two on a few minor words and actions.

I wish Mary Warner Ford could have the benefit of an adult role now and then, such as in "Cross Purposes" last year, because it seems that she is the same young girl every play. She played Richard's fifteen-year-old sister Mildred in "Ah Wilderness."

As for the set designs, they were real once the curtain was open, but sometimes I wondered if there had been a stage strike as the minutes between scenes crept by.

Summing up: good Guignol entertainment, in spite of limitations. The light, nostalgic humor of the play is contagious.

Campus Has Railroad Facilities

By ED VAN HOOK

If you are looking for summer employment with a railroad company, don't count on the Lexington and Ohio, even though it is right here on the campus. Where?

Well, what there is of the old L. & O., is a portion of the original track, a few feet of iron rail, and limestone, mounted in cement. This you will find in front of the Engineering Building between Neville Hall and the Agriculture Building on South Limestone Street.

A plaque mounted on the monument when the track was placed there during dedication ceremonies on May 30, 1916, explains the event this way.

"The restoration of a portion of the original track of the Lexington and Ohio Railroad (now Louisville and Nashville), laid at Lexington in 1831, is dedicated to those men of forethought and courage who were pioneers in railroad development in America. Erected Anno Domini MCMXVI."

This section of the Lexington and Ohio's rails was unearthed in July, 1915, by workmen who were reconstructing the freight yards of what is now the Louisville and Nashville railroad.

Believed to be the first steam line in the West, the Lexington and Ohio was opened in 1832 from Lexington for a distance of six miles.

Before the steam engine was commissioned, mules drew the first car. Later the line was built to Frankfort and eventually tapped Portland.

A booklet describing the history of the railroad was published in 1916 by Mrs. W. T. Lafferty. A copy of the book is preserved in the vertical files of the Margaret I. King Library Reference Room.

Mrs. Lafferty gives an insight to this railroading venture, "believed to be the first west of the Allegheny Mountains."

She describes how Lexington procured its charter for the purpose of building a line "from Lexington to some point on the Ohio River."

The Kentucky Legislature granted the charter in January, 1830. On March 6, 1830, Elisha I.

Winters was elected president of the proposed corporation, and Henry Clay was made chairman of the board of stockholders.

It took one year to lay the first six miles of the track from Lexington to Villa Grove, now Yarnallton. The top of the hill at Frankfort was reached by January, 1834.

By the next January, experimental runs were being made with an "elegant new locomotive," imported from the East, according to Mrs. Lafferty's booklet.

The first engine used by the Lexington and Ohio was built in 1835 by Joseph Bruen of Lexington. The L and O rails were made of iron, and unlike today's method of laying the rails on wooden cross-ties, they were imbedded in limestone.

The present-day Louisville and Nashville tracks follow almost the same route which the original L and O engines used between Lexington and Frankfort.

The city of Louisville was to construct the lines from the other end, and eventually did complete its portion of the road. After construction of a bridge over the Kentucky River, the two lines were connected at Frankfort.

Financial difficulties struck the Lexington and Ohio company after some years of operation, and in 1881 the railroad became a part of the Louisville and Nashville system.

Khrush Denounces Ike

to Portugal he had expected to make next week.

Khrushchev is going to East Berlin to talk with Communist chiefs and address a rally.

Khrushchev hit hard at Eisenhower on the plane incident.

Referring to Eisenhower's promise that the U.S. would send no more intelligence planes over the Soviet Union, Khrushchev declared the pledge was meaningless on the ground it would apply only through the closing months of Eisenhower's term.

He stressed that Eisenhower had stated he could make no undertaking binding beyond January, 1961.

"Can such a statement by the President satisfy anyone but the aggressor himself?" Khrushchev asked. "International relations cannot be based on the term of office of this or that responsible person. . . . If the logic of the President is to be followed, it would be impossible to negotiate, for instance, on disarmament."

Any agreement reached under such conditions, he said, might be "thrown in the waste basket" by the President's successor.

One newsmen recalled that Khrushchev said he had known of U. S. intelligence flights over the Soviet Union before his visit to the United States last September. Why had he not asked Eisenhower about it at Camp David?

Khrushchev replied that he became apprehensive after the President had called him "my friend" and suggested that Khrushchev also address him in the same way.

"I thought there was something fishy about this friend of mine, and I didn't approach the subject, and it turned out that I was right, because when we caught them rehanding. They said that they are not thieves. It is just their thief-like policy. That is all."

Khrushchev criticized both Macmillan and De Gaulle for not showing more will power when it came to the question of getting Eisenhower to apologize for the spy plane.

He expressed his gratitude, however, to Macmillan for the zeal he displayed in trying to arrange the Summit Conference. He also said he had high regard for De Gaulle and believed relations between France and the Soviet Union would be strengthened rather than weakened.

Khrushchev wrapped up one of his attacks on Eisenhower in praising De Gaulle. He said De Gaulle "did all he could so the conference would be a success."

"He knew it was necessary to condemn a thief when he is caught," the Russian said. "But the problem was that the thief was not only an ally of France but leader of the West . . . if one of our allies had acted in this way we would have condemned him."

Flanked by his inseparable companion, Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky, Khrushchev seemed to be exhilarated by the spectacle—the brilliant lights, the huge, jam-packed room, even the boos which mingled with the applause.

He made these main points:

1. He intends to sign a separate peace treaty with Communist East Germany when he is ready. But there was no hint that any action is imminent.

2. The Soviet Union is ready to continue the Geneva talks on nuclear tests, but will resume testing if the United States does. Khrushchev accused the United States of procrastination and said if this continues the Soviet Union will toss the question back to the United Nations.

3. The Soviet Union has no intention to mix in U.S. domestic politics. If the next president is one who cannot negotiate with Moscow, the Russians are prepared to wait for another. Franklin D. Roosevelt was a worthy representative of capitalist society, Khrushchev said, but his policy died with him.

Book On Fruit Growing Co-Author By Schneider

Dr. G. W. Schneider, head of the horticulture department at UK, is the co-author of a book just published by Prentice-Hall, Inc.

Dr. Schneider wrote the work on "Fruit Growing" in collaboration with Dr. C. C. Scarborough, head of agricultural education at North Carolina State College, Raleigh.

Its primary use will be in agricultural education but Dr. Schneider said it will also serve as a reference work for fruit growers interested in understanding the principles of fruit production and the application of the principles to their own problems.

Part one of the 305-page work describes why and how certain factors affect plant growth and fruit development. Botany and physiology of fruit crops, flower bud formation, and pollination are also explained.

Each major fruit crop is discussed in the second part of the book, with special consideration given to the basic problems involved in producing each of the crops.

Dr. Schneider became head of the UK horticulture department in 1958 after serving for eight years as professor of horticulture at North Carolina State.

He was graduated from Ohio State University with a bachelor of science and master of science degrees. He was awarded the Ph.D. degree from Rutgers University.

Straus said in his paper, however, that a basic objective of the department will be to encourage and develop collaborative effort whenever and wherever mutual interests can be defined.

The Department of Behavioral Sciences should provide excellent potential for attracting research grants and other support for the Medical Center and the University at large, Dr. Straus said.

Still another potential development, he said, is a graduate education program offering opportunities for doctoral candidates in any of the behavioral sciences.

Wait 'Til Next Year

Faculty members at the University, it must be admitted, are just as erudite and intelligent as those of any other institution. UK professors, on the whole, have established a good reputation for themselves in academic circles.

Notice we said academic circles.

But when it comes to politics, we can't give the faculty too much applause. Nay, we doubt whether any of our professors could be considered experts—except the theorists in the Political Science Department—in the field of the glowing oration and shaking of hands.

Not that our professors are stupid. No. They just aren't politicians, that's all.

Around a month ago, the State Legislature passed a bill requiring that two faculty members be put on the Board of Trustees as nonvoting members. In a mass faculty meeting at Memorial Hall, the confusion was so great that a nominating committee had to be chosen.

Then the faculty did not like the committee's nominating recommendations, and they had to be changed. Next, on the first ballot, 154 nominations, including three deans, were made. (Seventy-nine persons received one vote each.)

A second ballot was required, the list being reduced to six professors. A third, and now there are only three candidates left in the race. There is quite a bit of hope (and amazement), we understand, that one of the three will be eliminated on the fourth ballot.

What this proves about faculty members may outwardly seem facetious, because they are so normally individualistic that they can get nothing accomplished in a short amount of time and in an organized manner. But the problem is of a wider scope at UK.

There is too much disorganization, petty bickering, confusion, and plain buncombe over the most minor of jobs. It has been said that it takes a faculty member six hours to do a simple task that his child could do in one. We don't doubt that too much. Most of it is done on committees.

We see no reason, other than amateurish and gauche procedures, why it would take so long to elect two members to the Board of Trustees. We can see no reason for wasting the University's time for the many other small jobs here.

The University Faculty's Elections Committee has our sympathy, mind you, because we think it did a reasonably good job. It had to satisfy the faculty, a group which seems to think that speed is some sort of demon casting an evil spell.

So, the Board of Trustees has two seats open to two UK faculty members when the faculty can get its men elected. And we sincerely believe that the faculty will make it.

Next year, sometimes.

No Boos For Booze

From UK professors to students, we have heard criticism that the Little Kentucky Derby should not be billed as "America's most spectacular weekend" because it is patterned after a similar college event at the University of Indiana.

The most recurrent objection to LKD was that it is not original, and, in these college extravaganzas, originality makes the event click. What the University of Kentucky needs is a college weekend that is novel and purely Kentuckian in design, home-grown to the letter.

This, at first, may seem to be a tough problem. Actually it is simple, though. What one occupation, above all, are Kentuckians noted for the world over? What, if suggested to a northerner, will bring to mind Kentucky without any hesitation?

Moonshine still making, of course.

One could not imagine the greatness that this would bring to the University and the blanket participation from the campus it would get. What would be more soul-inspiring than UK students competing for the championship, twisting and turning copper tubing? What would be more heartening than 8,000 students turning out to see the exciting results?

Ah, yes, those who scream of student apathy would be struck dumb by such a spectacle. Professors would shriek in ecstasy to see such enthusiasm, and townspeople would get in the fun, too. Of course it would be legal because the police would be invited.

The contest rules, naturally, would have to be elaborate. As any one can plainly see, you can't just judge a good still by its looks. No, it has to be tested by students, professors, Lexingtonians, and the policemen, too.

So, if UK needs money for scholarships, an original idea for a college weekend, and the greatest bit of publicity it has ever received, we highly recommend the moonshine-still-making contest for a spectacular.

It could turn out to be the longest weekend in history.

The Readers' Forum

Respect

To The Editor:

I see that two people have written to the Readers' Forum to display their inappreciation of the Honors Day awards. Their disdain is nothing but sour grapes, or jealousy.

The Sullivan Medallions were awarded to two of the most outstanding people in the graduating class. Certainly this is an honor.

They were selected because they had the characteristics of heart, mind, and conduct which evince a spirit of love for helpfulness to other men and women. Certainly this is important.

As for the 300 honor students representing the upper 3 percent of their colleges—we should be proud that among queen contests and true mediocrity awards, we can look to something representative of an area often slighted. The Honors Day program stands out as the one distinct recognition of UK's academic achievements.

Without it, one might almost suppose that UK didn't have any.

No, I wasn't a Sullivan recipient, nor an honor student, but I have respect for those who are.

The Civil War Revived

By BOBBIE MASON

According to unreconstructed and rebellious promises, the South shall surely rise again. And it will have its chance next year with the Civil War Centennial—a five-year reproduction of the War.

A publisher of a Civil War history magazine said that the war probably ranks second only to religion as the most written about subject in the United States, and that the field is by no means exhausted.

For the next war, plans are being made for a naval ship which will be a floating museum, and people are being encouraged to search their attics for old diaries and relics relating to the period.

The centennial will include reenactments of the battles of Fort Sumter, Sharpsburg, Bull Run, and Pea Ridge. While the ROTC is off drilling at the summit, our national troops will be playing around with cannons and muskets.

The fallacy here, I think, is that the Civil War, 100 years over, is still being fought. It did not end in 1865—nay, it will never end. The people refuse to forget such a valorous background as they fervently salvage souvenirs of the war. They have abandoned only the squalid and the sordid, the tragic and the disastrous. The mud and guts have all dried up and the war has become illustrious, fraught with culture. It has been romanticized to death.

Of course the Civil War was the best thing that ever happened to the United States. Wars are good things and should be remembered forever. Their traditions should be kept.

This is all good. People remember their past struggles and appreciate their freedom more—or nurse their prejudices more. The civil rights questions which smoldered then, supposedly put out by the end of a war, are flaming now, and the original prejudices have exploded into violence.

Kentucky has thrown its flag into the crusade and will be waving in all its Confederate splendor during the revival. This is a publicity project for UK and the Blue Grass called Waveland, a rehabilitated Southern mansion with a flair for folklore and a history which touched Daniel Boone. Home of the Bryan family, the mansion has been turned into a museum to preserve Kentucky's culture. It will have antiques, a carriage collection, and various rooms dedicated to important persons.

Kentucky's decadent culture (nonetheless improved by this worthy gesture) will be preserved in all its reactionary relics. The Civil War gallantry will be incorporated in the red flags, spinning wheels, slaves' quarters, and fireplace utensils.

The essentials of history must be preserved with no less elaboration than this junkpile of ostentation.

(Install a new Chemistry Annex and not one person would go to see it out of curiosity).

Like graduation ceremonies, the dedication of Waveland will froth. A song has even been written for the museum. It will be sung on dedication day. All the living of the Bryan clan will be present to appreciate.

The publicity Waveland will bring to UK is inestimable. UK will regale history students in the future with its beautiful museum which shows how the people of Kentucky have lived, or failed to do same, through the years.

Waveland—publicity project for UK, culture preserver, Blue Grass tourist attraction, Southern aristocracy incarnate, expense.

Granted that museums are good things, that Kentucky has had a lively culture, and that the Civil War is worth repeating.

But spend UK's money for a building full of antiques?

Graduate Students Study Lexington Traffic Problems

Two UK graduate students have just completed a comprehensive study concerning the shopping and traveling habits of Lexingtonians. Civil engineering students John O. Hibbs and Harold G. Mays estimated their research to cost $2,500.

The 170-page report contains detailed graphs and maps in partial fulfillment of requirements for master of science degrees they will receive May 30.

The students' conclusions, based on personal interviews, postcard surveys, and traffic counts, have been turned over to Lexington Traffic Engineer Joseph M. Heidenreich for use in the study of Lexington traffic problems.

Heidenreich said the applications of the methods used by Hibbs and Mays and data obtained by them will be of tremendous help in planning future streets and highways for Lexington.

The study, which took 13 months, was made under the supervision of John A. Dearing, assistant professor of civil engineering. Contributions to the study were also made by Heidenreich and Robert A. Damerau, city-county planning director.

Hibbs, from Vine Grove, was graduated from UK in January, 1959, with a bachelor's degree in civil engineering.

Beginning in June he will be employed by the Bureau of Public Roads, Springfield, Ill.

With the exception of one summer in which he attended Cornell University on a grant-in-aid from the American Asphalt Institute, he has been serving as an instructor at UK while doing graduate work.

A&S Seniors Are Helping Evaluate UK

Seniors in the College of Arts and Sciences have received a questionnaire from a student evaluation committee of the college to help evaluate the college and the University.

The evaluation sheet is sent out by the Arts and Sciences College with the help of the senior class officers. There are eight major questions on the sheet which deal with topics from term papers to classroom facilities.

The questionnaire asked for constructive criticism in regard to the individual departments and for the college as a whole.

Radio Arts To Produce Live Television Program

Students in UK's Department of Radio Arts will produce their first live television show Friday.

Twenty-three students from "Broadcasting Today," taught by Mrs. Elizabeth Taylor, will participate in the 30-minute telecast from WKYT, Lexington television station.

The program will be based on a women's feature format, and will feature style shows and interviews.

Ronnie Nickells and Hudson Clay, radio arts students employed by the station, will produce the program.

This will be the first live telecast produced by the students.

Previously, students studying television have simulated telecasts by using dummy cameras.

The program will be aired from 10:30-11 a.m. Friday.

English Club Picnic

The English Club is sponsoring a free picnic for interested students and the English Department faculty today.

The picnic will be at Dr. Darrell McCall's house on the Bryan Station Road. Those wishing to attend should meet in front of the Fine Arts Building at 4 p.m.

50 High School Artists To Attend Studio Week

Fifty high school artists have been selected to attend a special course at the University this summer and work closely with creative artists.

The project, entitled Studio Week, is sponsored by the Junior League of Lexington in cooperation with the University Art Department. It will include drawing, painting, and design classes and art movies. The 50 students from all over the state were selected from a list of nominees prepared by high school principals.

Two internationally-known New York artists, Ralston Crawford and Andre Racz, will direct classes for the young men and women. In connection with the program, the University will continue to host paintings from the Guggenheim Museum.

Mrs. Bruce Glenn, chairman of the project for the Junior League, said the program is aimed at broadening interest in art across the state and encouraging students who are interested in the subject.

Two of the students will be awarded full-tuition scholarships in art at the end of the course, which opens June 13 and continues through June 18.

YOU'RE ALL WET if you think swim-wear styles haven't changed. They definitely have, and the stretchables are far in the lead. They fit well and are terrific for skiers and divers. No splits, no tears, just solid comfort and good looks. A very neat and popular model is called the "Harpoon" and features the new "Hawaiian" length. Another sporty one is called the "Beachnik." Yep there's quite a change in swim wear. Cabana sets continue to be big favorites and come in a wide assortment of colors and patterns.

NOTHING BUT SHARP—At a swinging affair the other p.m. John Mutchler was a killer in his bright red dinner jacket made of pure silk and woven in a shantung weave. His trousers were jet black, as were his accessories. Since he has a broken arm, he played it real suave and carried his arm in a jet black silk sling. Must say Mutchler, you were quite debonaire, sling and all. His arm slung and he swung!

NOW is the time to give some thought to graduation gifts, and if I can be of any small assistance please contact me, be happy to help you. Tip, try a short sleeved dress shirt and have it monogrammed, (free) this makes a nice practical and personalized gift.—Tip No. 2, when really stumped give a gift certificate, (everyone appreciates them).

IN MY MAIL I received an invitation to the Kappa Sigma spring formal this coming Friday night. Will be there, and thanks a million for the invite. Nice of you! SAE won the Little Kentucky Derby. Congrat's. And now I'll get on my velocipede and peddle away (but I know I can't win).

So long for now.

LSU Rated Team To Beat In SEC Track Meet

LSU's powerful track team is heavily favored to win its 18th Southeastern Conference title this weekend in Gainesville, Fla.

Host team Florida stands the best chance of upsetting the speedsters of Coach Al Moreau but injuries have been the worst enemy of the Gators all year.

According to the scoring system released through the SEC Commissioner's office, LSU's rating is 64 points. Florida is second with 49 points, while the others and their points are Georgia Tech (30), Alabama (26 3/4), Auburn (22 1/4), Kentucky (20 3/4), Georgia (10), Vanderbilt (7 1/2), Tennessee (5 3/4), Mississippi State (2), Mississippi (0), and Tulane (0).

Five new records will be set if the competitors equal their best marks set in dual meet competition this spring.

LSU's Carl Seefield bettered the 880-yard run record by six-tenths of a second by running 1:52.2; LSU's Dickie Durham has recorded an amazing time of :13.9 in the high hurdles to better the SEC record of :14.1; Florida's Henry Wadsworth has vaulted 15 feet 1/4 inch to better the record of 14 feet 2 7/8 inches; Georgia Tech's Ed Nutting has bettered the shot put record of 55 feet 1 1/4 inches by throwing 58 feet 7 inches and Auburn's Richard Crane has bettered the discus mark by one-half inch by throwing 171 feet 4 1/2 inches.

Defending champions from the 1959 meet are Ralph Fabian (LSU) in the 100, 220, and low hurdles; E. G. Plummer (Kentucky) in the 880; Crane (Auburn), shot put and discus, and John Hale (Florida) in the javelin.

In the conference meet, the scoring is five points for first place, four for second, three for third, two for fourth, and one for fifth place.

LSU is expected to score in 14 of the 16 events. The Tigers' two voids are the mile and two-mile runs. Florida and Alabama should score in 11 events; Tech in 10; Auburn in 9; and Kentucky in 7 events.

Individual leaders with their times or marks are as follows: 100—Guy Tallent (Vandy), :9.7; 220—Ralph Fabian (LSU), :21.2; 440—Buddy Gum (Kentucky), :48.3; 880—Carl Seefield (LSU),

Britain's Fighter Force Remains On Ready Alert

LONDON, May 18 (AP)—Britain's fighter force was ordered to a state of "full readiness" four days ago and the alert is still on, a Royal Air Force chief disclosed tonight.

Air Marshal Sir Hector McGregor immediately added an assurance it has no connection with tensions generated in Paris by the summit meeting.

He told Newsmen at the start of a three-day fighter command exercise that the alert was ordered May 14.

"The exercise was arranged a long time ago and it was not that our crystal ball showed the outcome of the summit meeting," he declared.

"Our state of readiness that we are maintaining is in no way tied to yesterday's events" (the break-up of the summit meeting).

Trackman E. G. Plummer Is Osteological Expert

By GEORGE SMITH

How would you like to be an amateur osteologist?

What's that? Why, that is one who collects and studies bones and skulls.

E. G. Plummer, senior education major and UK trackman from Danville, has found this to be a fascinating pastime. He has collected over 30 different types of animal skulls.

Plummer, who is the SEC 880-yard record holder, has a dual major in education. He is combining a physical education degree with one in biological science.

His natural interest in the study of zoology and a yen for cave exploration led to the development of this hobby.

Two of his most prized collections are mounted skeletons of a sparrow and a chicken. These are mounted on a small branch.

E. G., called "Eggs" by his teammates, is constantly on the lookout for a possible specimen to add to his collection.

On one track trip, he saw a dead crow by the side of the road. He stopped his car and retrieved the crow, wrapped it in a burlap bag and tossed it in the trunk of the car.

When he receives a head, he boils it in water to get the meat off, and then soaks it in peroxide to bleach it.

The largest bone in his collection is part of a whale vertebrae. The smallest is a frog jawbone. He also has the skull of a shrew which is supposed to be the world's smallest mammal.

Plummer has a petrified piece of bone that he found in one of his exploration romps through caves. He thinks the bone is part of an Indian shinbone.

At present, Plummer has the bones and skull of a monkey which he intends to reconstruct.

He has nine different kinds of bird skulls, among which are those of a parakeet, crow, sparrow, blackbird, starling, grackle, and rooster.

The animal skulls that Plummer has include a mink, possum, rabbit, groundhog, and innumerable others.

He has collected quite an assort-

Deadly Plots

HONOLULU (AP)—Hawaiians want to own land—dead or alive.

This was Grover A. Godfrey's explanation for record sales on cemetery plots at his Hawaiian Memorial Park, which sold 32,600 sites in its first two years of existence.

ment of fossils while exploring caves. One of the rare things that he has is a "celt," a stone implement used to skin animals.

One of his unusual fossils is a moth imbedded in a rock.

Plummer is constantly inquiring about sources where he can find other bones and fossils. The thing he would like to find most is a complete human skull.

"Information on the whereabouts of a spare head of sorts would be appreciated," said E. G. Plummer, trackman, future teacher and amateur osteologist.

Even Split Of Wildcats Made For Blue-White Game

Battle lines for a "hot war" between rival units of Kentucky's spring football squad scheduled Friday night on Stoll Field were drawn yesterday.

Head Coach Blanton Collier and staff separated 58 younger and less-experienced candidates into opposite camps.

The evenly matched Blue-White game winds up the NCAA-allowed 20 days of spring grid drills.

Kickoff time is set for 8 p.m. with a provision for postponement to Saturday night in the event of rain. Admission is $1 for adults, fifty cents for students.

As promised by Coach Collier, the squad appears to be split "right down the middle" in an effort to assure an evenly matched battle.

While the Blues have been the dominant team in spring practice scrimmages, they will not enter the Blue-White game with any clear-cut edge in the opinion of observers who have followed the team in its spring preparations.

The even distribution of talent and potential between the rival units is further pointed up by the absence of all but four of the 16 upcoming senior members of the team.

Although the seniors took part in last year's Blue-White game, it is customary at UK and throughout the rest of the Southeastern Conference to excuse the seniors from their final spring practice and the spring game.

An even more important factor in Coach Collier's decision to let them off this year is the critical need for developing depth to back up the regulars next fall.

"Our younger boys need every bit of experience they can pick up," Collier explains, "and I felt they would benefit by playing extensively in the game."

Only seniors due to see action in the Blue-White encounter are Co-Capt. Jerry Elsaman at quarterback, end Don Nuergue, fullback Jim Fisher, and Jim Reader at right half. All are on the White team.

After being excused, Elsaman returned to practice to bolster the quarterback ranks depleted by a hand injury to Tom Rodgers and a sprained ankle suffered by Jerry Woolum. Nuergue likewise had been excused, but came back to relieve Hutchinson at left end when Hutchinson came up with a slight shoulder injury.

Analysis of the two units seems to give an edge in the backfield, particularly in ground offensive operations, to the Blues with such performers as fullback Gary Cochran and halfback Jock Steward—both of whom have stood out in spring practice.

Sophomore Pat Counts will handle the quarterbacking chores with help from Bill Davidson. Dave Chapman is due to be the left half in the place of Bill Ransdell, who will see only limited service because of an injury.

The Whites counter with a promising passing combination with Elsaman and John Rampulla doing the throwing and ends Hutchinson and Nuergue as receivers.

The two starting forward walls shape up as about even, and the telling factor in the game could well be the performance by receivers in the respective lines.

The complete squad split is as follows:

BLUES

Ends—Dave Gash, Max Walton, Dennis Schrecker, Keith Hutson, Monte Campbell.

Tackles—Bob Gebhart, Wayne Dixon, Bob Barnett, Danny Points.

Guards—Jim Hill, Mel Chandler, Dan Holey, Ken Ross, Jon Jurgens, Bruce Crockett, Paul Finneseth.

Centers—Irv Goode, Bob Johnson.

Quarterbacks—Pat Counts, Bill Davidson.

Halfbacks—Dave Chapman, Bill Ransdell, Gary Steward, Don Carson, Clark Mayfield.

Fullbacks—Gary Cochran, Bob Holman, Ted Powers.

The Dope Sheet

By

SCOTTIE HELT

Just as with basketball, University of Kentucky baseball ended abruptly short of a chance at tournament action although the squad was in the thick of the Southeastern Conference race right down to the wire.

Also, as in basketball, team members and ardent fans are boasting, "wait 'til next year."

First glance at the prospectus for 1961 baseball merits these encouraging notes.

Included in the group of five seniors are such top-notch performers as heavy-hitting Ron Bertsch and steady workmen the likes of Mick Conner, Bob Linkner, Bill Carder, and Lowell Hughes. However, returning will be the potent bats of Dick Parsons, Allen Feldhaus, Eddie Monroe and company.

Pitching should be a strong point next season with the entire 10-man hurling staff returning. It took time for the pitching to round into shape this spring, and before Coach Harry Lancaster had a good "look-see" at his moundsmen, a number of "footballish" scores had been recorded.

However, when a steady rotation had been secured, UK pitching grew stronger with complete games being pitched in the last four starts. Included was a brilliant no-hit effort by Mike Howell, a route-going job by Bobby Newsome and a pair of complete games by Charlie (Buzzsaw) Loyd. In one of these games, Loyd had a no-hitter going for 8 and two-thirds innings.

In the midst of all this optimism, Coach Lancaster has sounded an advanced warning. His warning is that the team will be at a disadvantage because of its early-season schedule.

As is the custom in the SEC, teams play each other on an alternate year, home-and-home basis, meaning that the teams the Cats met here this season will be encountered on their diamond next year.

This week SEC baseball coaches are meeting at Oxford, Miss. to compile the league schedule.

Lancaster, unable to attend the meeting because of commitments here, has sent in the dates on which UK will be able to meet conference foes. The UK mentor says that the situation doesn't look too encouraging.

The tentative slate calls for the Wildcats to open their season at Knoxville, March 28, against Tennessee. The team will play another game with the Vols the next day and then move southward for two games with Auburn and Florida.

Both of these clubs, one-two finishers in the SEC Eastern Division, this year, will have the twofold advantage of having most of their top men back and a more seasonable climate in which to practice.

So, while UK could have the best ball club in the conference next year, it could be out of contention before ever playing at home.
