Bill would reduce defaults on loans to college students

By JANE NORMAN USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

WASHINGTON — Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, is pushing a bill that he has said would reduce standent loan defaults by $1.3 billion over the next five years. In his first year as chairman of a Senate subcommittee that deals with higher decuation funding, Harkin said he became distressed that $1.9 billion was spent every year. $1.9 billion was spent every year to cover defaults in the student loan Harkin said 57 percent of the schools across the country with de-fault rates of more than 20 percent are proprietary schools, as are 75 percent of those with default rates that top 50 percent.

Harkin's bill would require that all students without high school diplomas pass a test developed by an independent organization approved by the education secretary.

Current law sets no standards or regulations other than that students may receive federal loans if they demonstrate an "ability to benefit" from a school's curriculum.

Harkin's bill also would bar loans to first-time students until 30 days after classes had begun. Schools with high default rates would have to implement a refund policy based on how long the stu-dent attended the school.

The bill also would standardize the method of figuring default rates and would require institutions whose rates are higher than 25 percent to enter into four-year plans to cut defaults.

The bill is pending before a Sen-

Pam McKinney, Harkin's press secretary, said his bill contained measures that the Department of Education "can't or won't do."

She said Harkin, who tangled with federal officials at hearings on with rederat officials at nearings on student loans earlier this year, would be "very pleased" if the de-partment would make an effort to cut the default rate, but "he isn't confident they will without some kind of nudge."

Bob Davidson, director of the post-secondary division of the budget service section of the Department of Education, said the agency is "moving pretty fast" to cut the default rate.

Acid rain to be focus of 2-day conference

By TIFFANY SIMMONS Contributing Writer

Environmental experts and public officials will address the problems and possible solutions of acid rain in Appalachia at a conference to be held at UK this week.

"Environment and Technology in Appalachia" is this year's theme for the Appalachian Center's "Confer-ence on Appalachian Thursday and Friday in the Student Center. It is co-sponsored by the Canadian gov-ernment and the American Society of Agricultural Engineer.

During the conference 30 speakers will offer their views on the current status of the environment in Appalachia and the implications of technological and environmental change.

They also will explore various spects of environmental health and aspects of environmental health and present innovative programs and strategies for addressing environ-mental issues in the region.

Jim Bradley, minister of environ-ment in Ontario, will be speaking about the Canadian perspective on acid rain in his speech, "Remarks on Acid Rain," at 12:30 p.m. Fri-day.

"The Canadians don't have the chemical buffering capacity that the U.S. has, so the acid rain affects the Canadians much more than it does the Americans," said Wayne Davis, a professor in biological sciences. "Most of New York and New England is also affected by acid rain."

"The information we got from scientists is that it is implicated in soricauses, but does not lead to a serious crisis. However, the pollu-tion that is causing acid rain is de-creasing under be current Clean Air Act, and efforts to control it will cost a lot of money, and I don't think it is warranted at this time."

Other topics to be discussed at the conference include "Atmospher-ic Deposition and Its Potential Sig-nificance on the Hard Wood Forest Ecosystem," "Acid Rain and Water Quality Issues" and "Solid and Haz-ardous Waste Issues."

Each presentation will last about one hour. Except for a few panel discussions, the presentations will be grouped in pairs.

A public forum on "Appalachian Citizen Action to Preserve the Environment" will be held at 2 p.m. Thursday. Representatives of three grass-roots environmental groups will lead the discussion, which open to both conference registrants and the general public.

Registration for the conference is $25. For more information, call the Appalachian Center at 257-4852.

SGA to distribute campus directories

If you've been having trouble finding the phone numbers and University departments, your problems soon will be solved.

Off-campus students can pick up the directories in the SGA Office, 120 Student Center, beginning this aftermoon.

The directory includes student, faculty, staff and departmental phone listings as well as other campus information, including a campus map and information about UK Student Health Services.

Smith, 20 at the time and a wide receiver at UK, was arrested in Cincinnati on Feb. 26, 1988, by agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration on two charges of aggravated trafficking and preparation to distribute.

He then spent eight days in jail. "It was a nightmare. There's nothing worse," Smith said. "I don't try to look back and think about that at all. I don't even really like talking about it. It's just a mistake that I made and I paid for that mistake."

Trustbusters? ... Coors-Stroh, GM-Chrysler deals to test Bush administration

USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

WASHINGTON — Once upon a time, when presidents spoke softly and carried big sticks, the U.S. government had a tough anti-trust and carried big sticks, the U.S. government had a tough anti-trust policy.

In those days, the idea of Coors acquiring Stroh, or General Motors and Chrysler forming a joint production company would have unleashed a battalion of trust-busters determined to bust up the deals.

But U.S. anti-trust policy changed radically in the 1980s.

After an eight-year relaxation of government scrutiny of mergers under the Reagan administration, the future of U.S. antitrust policy is uncertain, many analysts say.

Now as the Bush administration begins to define its course, two prominent deals emerging from Detroit could help signal just how tough—or cade as designal just how tough—or oaks and the signal just how tough—or oaks seems will be on business combinations.

Anti-trust legal experts are closely watching the Justice Department's response to the proposed Coors-Stroh combination. The proposed $425 million acquisition of Detroit-based Stroh Brewery Co., the nation's third-largest brewer, by No. 4 Coors Brewing Co. of Golden, Colo, would further consolidate the already highly concentrated beer business, where four companies control more than 80 percent of U.S. beer sales.

"The way they handle that case will be the first hard evidence for will be the first hard evidence for the business community on where they will draw the line" on mer-gers, said William E. Kovacic, a former Federal Trade Commission antiturst attorney and now professor of law at George Mason University in Virginia. James F. Rill, the Justice De-partment's new anti-trust chief, is expected by anti-trust lawyers to take a somewhat tougher line to-ward mergers than his Reagan ad-ministration predecessors.

The General Motors-Chrysler proposal, in which the No. 1 and No. 3 domestic automakers propose a new joint venture to produce manual transmissions, "is something that should be looked at very carefully," by anti-trust officials, said Jonathan W. Cuneo, former counsel to the House antitrust subcommittee.

Cuneo is now counsel to the Washington-based Committee to Support the Antitrust Laws, a lawyers' group advocating strict antitrust enforcement.

Cuneo and other authorities interviewed generally agreed that the viewed generally agreed that the GM-Chrysler deal probably will have an easier time passing govern-ment review than will the big beer

Manufacturing joint ventures "are rarely problems for anti-trust," said Robert Pitofsky, a professor and former law dean at Georgetown University. "It's only when you get into joint marketing that there might be a problem."

The Coors-Stroh deal, which has been challenged in court by other brewers, may indicate how strictly the new antitrust team at the Justice Department will enforce the 1984 merger guidelines developed in the Reagan administration. Some private experts believe that the big beer deal violates those guidelines.

Based on sheer numbers alone, the Coors-Stroh merger sets off an anti-trust warning light, some legal dex that measures the anti-competitive heat given off by a proposed consolidation. The index gauges how much the merger could increase the concentration of market power, which could lead to illegal behavior such as price-fixing or predatory pricing.

Anti-trust analysts look at shares of market, and the beer industry is already dominated by Anheuser-Busch (about 41 percent of U.S. beer sales), Miller Brewing (about 21 percent), Stroh (about 11 per-cent), Coors (about 9 percent) and cent). Translating that to a merger-index number, the market shares are squared (41 times 41 yields a 1,681 index number for Anheuser Busch) and then added up — producing an index number of 2,373 for the five beer companies before the Coors-Stroh merger.

Stroh merger.

Any industry that reaches 1,800 on the index is considered "highly concentrated." The Coors-Stroh merger would raise the index to about 2,571.

Warnings required on containers of alcohol

USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

The federal government is requiring beer, wine and liquor producers to put health-warning labels on their cans and bottles by Nov. 18.

Most in the alcohol industry, which is not too happy with the government regulation, are waiting until the deadline to comply.

But in many areas of the country, Miller's time came a month early. Cans and bottles of Miller High Life, Miller Genuine Draft and Miller Lite sporting the new warning label have begun appearing on shelves.

ing tase have began appearing on shelves. "We believe we're the first, but we don't particularly strive to take any glory in saying that," said Miller Brewing Co. spokesman Steve Forsyth. "We just fett that if it's going to be a requirement, we might as well just go ahead and do it."

it's going to be a requirement, we might as well just go ahead and do it."

The warning label reads:

"GOVERNMENT WARNING:
(1) According to the surgeon general, women should not drink alcoholic beverages during pregnancy because of the risk of birth defects.
(2) Consumption of alcoholic beverages impairs your ability to drive a car or operate machinery, and may cause health problems."

The warning is designed to curb alcohol abuse and birth defects caused by alcohol consumption.

The law requiring the labeling was co-sponsored by Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., and Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.
"We are hoping the warning labels will raise awareness of the dangers of alcohol consumption, especially during pregnancy." said Karen Lieberman, an official with the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a Washington-based health group that lobbied strongly for the label law. "Alcohol-related birth defects."

Brewers, distillers and wineries argued adamantly against the law little effect on alcohol abuse.
"We believe the information contained on the label is common knowledge to the consumer, and therefore, we don't believe the consumer will be surprised," said Stephen K. Lambright, vice president and group executive for Anhueser-Busch Cos., makers of Budweiser, the top-selling beer in the United States.

This year, education in Kentucky is at a crossroads. In particular, higher education in Kentucky is facing a crisis. We rapidly are falling behind our comparable institutions in other states in many facets of higher education. To you as students at the University of Kentucky, this means that that:

can pay more than we can.

"This lack of commitment to higher education also hampers a student's desire to stay in Kentucky and work after graduation because of our state's inability to attract quality industry.

In order to turn around this situation, it is imperative that every UK student become involved, because your future as citizen and employee in this state is at risk.

this struggle is to write a letter to your legislator and Gov. Wal-lace Wilkinson demanding that higher education receive the funding that it needs and de-

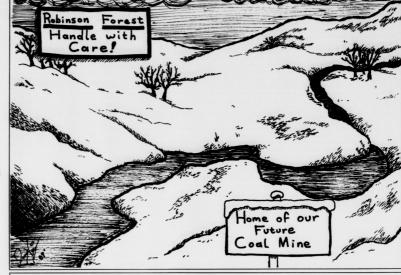

State Rep. Ernesto Scorsone, D-75th, was at the Oct. 25 meeting of the UK Student Gov-ernment Association Senate meeting and assured students of the impact of letters that legisla-tors have received from students thus far.

However, more needs to be

Please take five minutes Please take five minutes to write your legislator and the governor as it is both important and effective. If you need information on who your legislator is and their address, call the SGA office at 257-3191.

It is important for students to be heard in this effort to protect their future and the future of higher education.

'The Big Dude'

The possibilities are endless when it comes to God

"Brotha FX, whusup? (standard greeting). Gimme some dap! (kind of like a handshake). You got it! (standard reply)."
My friend Jesse B. Simple was back from the dead.
"Simple, where have you been? I thought you had dropped out of school."
"Don't commence."

"Don't count me out yet, FX. I just been chillin' that's all. You know how it is sometimes."

"Check that, but on a serious in, I haven't seen you since last month. I was worried about you."

"Hold up now, I don't temen ber asking you to worry about that, Simple. It just happens aturally if you care about some body. I love you like a broth, so if you drop out of sight I'm going to notice."

"Now freeze that action,"

"Now freeze that action,"

"Well, Eve had a jerri-curl, but other than that they were dead on us. But getting back to this brother-by love thing..."

"Now freeze that action, homey. It just don't seem right for a man to love another man. The whole idea makes me rad uncomfortable, and it ain't natural. I mean the Big Dude dirth make Adam and Steve, did He?"
"No Simple, She made Adam and Steve, dam and Eve... and in fact their pictures were on the cover of Newsweek (Jan. 11, 1988)."
"Get outta Dodge, what did

I could see that Simple was ex-tremely uncomfortable with the idea of a savior of color. Like most of us, he grew up with a picture of a white Jesus on the wall, so I didn't force the issue.

Understanding that if your Jesus is without color, it doesn't take a quantum leap to envisage a white Creator, and if your standard of perfection is the opposite of yourself then it follows that ...

I assured Simple that his suspicions were unfounded and attempted to get him to visualize new images like a black Madonna. MTV had prejudiced that idea, but Sean Penn's ex-wife's use of the black saint in her Like a Prayer' video did make it easier for him to visualize a savior of color. savior of color.

My earlier reference to the Creator as She had slipped by Simple's selective hearing, so I decided to try his patience again.

"No, no, no, no FX! I'm sor-ry. I mean, with a little effort I can see a Bob Marley-looking-black-Jesus and it's believable that a handful of white monks that a handrul or write monks who were translating the good book could've taken liberty with certain information about women and the people of the sun, but I cannot see the Big Dude as the Big Gal. I'm going to have to think about that one."

UK has a special knack for the ridiculous

Anyone walking across campus, who is even halfway aware, is subject to the ridiculous. Once I recognized this, my mind carried me to the absurd of this University.

These observations I share with ou:

(1) The Student Government Asexistion already gets a lot of grief, b I will keep my comments to Televising SGA meetings will never compensate for the greater and closer student interactions ne-cessary for an effective organization. And, one thing I cannot figure out — why does SGA need a constitution longer than that of the United States governmen?

(2) Is it really necessary for the folks of the Physical Plant Division to use blowers to collect fallen leaves?

sion to use blowers to collect fallen leaves?

That seems as practical as using a fan instead of a comb to fix one's hair.

I suppose rakes are archaic, and the money was better spent on this incredible technology han on high-re salaries for the professors or on more scholarships for students.

The California quake should have made it obvious that man cannot govern nature.

made it obvious and govern nature.

Personally, I would rather be able to crunch in the leaves than have to walk primly on manicured grounds.

UK, let us have a weak semblance of autumn, as nature will not oblige us even the temperature.

(3) I would like to know how the Office of Residence Life got the idea that "residence hall" is cozier than "dorm." Glorified names do not change the fundamental meaning of a word, lest we forget the "domestic engineer" fiasco.

I have called the Office of Residence Life, said "dorm" in the conversation, and been corrected—"It's residence hall, dear." I pay to live in the building; I will call it what I want and what it is.

(4) Further, whoever is in charge of regulating the furnaces, do not waste my money this year. I was truly disgusted at being so bloody but in my dorm room in the middle of winter last year and having to open the window to keep from baking.

(New dorm dwellers or students, ing.

(New dorm dwellers or students, give it another few weeks to experience this, if you have not yet done so in your classes.)
(5) It's freaky that there are nuclear bomb shelter signs still up on campus, for example the one at Blazer Hall.

In Keeneland Hall, the "yellow-and-black, hide-from-attack" sign points down the hall to the study room. A suggestion, perhaps, that only knowledge will save us?

I have yet to locate them, but I hope that these are no longer around. It would be curious if we are to use them, since the population on North Campus exceeds the maximum capacity of the shelters.

Or, am I just not invited should the need arise? As though it would really matter.

(6) Commuters are the most abundant body of students at UK.

(6) Commuters are the most abundant body of students at UK. The only reason I can figure why they get such pathetic treatment (Will the parking situation ever be allevjated?) is that the University makes so much money off the dorn dwellers. This says much for democracy and majority privileges. (7) Finally, if UK truly believes in education, why are the standards still so low?

in education, why are the standards still so low?

I hate the fact that my going to college means so little because practically anyone can be admitted. I want to learn more than what four years here will give me, but so many people do not know enough to be here now.

College work is for a higher edu.

to be here now.

College work is for a higher education; basics should be taught in the 12 years preceding this level of instruction. It is an embarrassment to UK, the faculty and the prepared students that unqualified students are in the classes.

Also, I do not understand why it is easier to get into the College of Education than other colleges. Li ing children should not be one the criteria, as it seems to be now

Buffy, if you enjoy children so much, be a mother. I do not want you to be the "educator" of the chil-dren I will have. I realize that the more intelligent will not go into education until pay and prestige of the field increase. I offer the following suggestion to help correct this dilemma:

UK, if you truly want to be a great school and make an awesome contribution to Kentucky, make the College of Education one of the most difficult schools to get into. Higher standards would eliminate the incompetent.

I note this example: A girl I know was in education, concentrating on math and science. One time she asked me to spell "initiate," a word I consider to be basic to an educated person's vocabulary. I mentioned this to her, and she replied, in all seriousness, that she did not have to know how to spell to teach math or science!

math or science!
In addition to educating for professions, universities, in my understanding, are to encourage rations thought. From the conditions on campus, the method of instruction is not by example. Too much of the absurd is abound.

At last week's UK Board of Trustees meeting, the Guitarist Chassain to feature Bach, others

By HUNTER HAYES

The Guitar Society of Lexington-Carula Kentucky will bring classical guitarist Olivier Chassain to UK tomorrow night for his only performance in the region during this tour.

Karen Russell of the Guitar Society said that Chassain's first visit to Kentucky, is possible "because he's on a tour as a result of winning the Guitar Foundation of America Competition last year. As a result, he gets to play in different places in the United States."

Chassain, 32, began playing guitar in Paris and studied at the Conservatoire National Superieur de Musique, During his studies there he was awarded the first prize for guitar under Alexandre Lagoya.

Chassain has performed with the Orchestra de la Grande Republicaine, the Regional Orchestra of Limousin, the Orleans Symphony and a host of ensembles.

Chassain is proficient at other instruments besides the guitar.

"Besides playing the guitar, we also know that he studies the tudies the und he's a fairly renowned expert on that," Russell said. "He specializes in guitar music of living composers.

Olivier Chassain will perform at 8 tomorrow night at the Ois A. Singletary Center for the Arts. Tickets are $8 and are available at the Singletary Center for the Ass box office and Disc Jockey Records at Lexington Green. Visa and Mas-tercard orders are accepted by calling the Singletary Center for the Arts at 227-4929.

Horror films experience decline in popularity

USA TODAY/Apple College

The slashers are leaving the theaters.

But they might come home with you in videocassette boxes.

The boom of ultra-violent horror movies that started with "When a Stranger Calls" and "Halloween" in 1978 has just about petered out.
After the new "Nightmare on Elm Street V: The Dream Child," Freddy Krueger is hanging up his bladefingered gloves. After "Friday the 13th Part VIII: Jason takes Manhattan," Jason is rumored to be dead for good.

Audiences are tired of the gore; revenues have dropped.

"The demand is almost gone, and it indicates the industry is moving away from (slashers), and that people want more than that," Gannett News Service critic Jack Garner said.
"And this summer, there are releases that did very well that aren't traditionally summer movies, like "When Harry Met Sally" ..."

Most folks will be pleased to see the stashers go. After the first rush of good, creepy films, the market was flooded with cheesy, derivative stuff like "Friday the 13th," "Terror Train," "Killer Workout," "Hyd Bloody Valentine" and so on, ad nauseum.

The "Nightmare on Elm Street" series, which came on the downside of the horror boom in 1985, gave the slashers a new life; they duction each year, but only about 10 or 15 see theatrical release. The rest are never completed or go straight to videotape.

And some of the films available on videotape without theatrical release are the most gruesome, like the controversial "Faces of Death" series.

The films are in documentary ather than dramatic, format rather than dramatic, format; they're compilations of filmed ex-ecutions, war atrocities and violent murders.
