Candidate meets with UK leaders

Leadership vital, Wethington says

By FRAN STEWART
Editor-in-Chief

The University doesn't need someone to come in and "turn it upside down," said Charles T. Wethington Jr., one of two finalists for the UK presidency.

Instead, the institution needs a strong leader to come in and move it along in the right direction, he said.

Wethington and his wife, Judy, spoke to 27 students Friday afternoon. They also met with groups of administrators and faculty the same day.

David P. Roselle, provost of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, and his wife, Louise, met with the same groups on Thursday.

"This is a unique institution," said Wethington, chancellor for UK's community college system. He said he doesn't know of many other institutions that incorporate a main campus, a medical center and a community college system.

Wethington, 51, said he has worked closely with President Otis A. Singletary and the other University chancellors in his 15 years as an administrator of the statewide community college system.

In addition to knowing the University, Wethington said another one of his strengths is that he knows Kentucky's leaders, such as state legislators.

His role as administrator for the 14-college system has taken him to various parts of the state. "I know people," he said. "I feel that I have developed a real working relationship" with people throughout the state.

"People all over the state have

Campus faculty back Roselle for president

By BRAD COOPER

Charles T. Wethington Jr., chancellor for UK's community college system and finalist for the UK presidency, emerged confident from Friday's meeting with faculty.

Smiling and rubbing his hands as he greeted Raymond Hornback, vice president for University relations who was on hand for the press conference that followed, Wethington said, "It went fine; it was a good meeting."

Facing "incisive" and "penetrating" questions from faculty members in a closed meeting, Wethington tried persuading faculty he was the best candidate for the UK presidency.

Some faculty members, however, say they aren't persuaded.

After Friday's meeting, at least six members of the Senate Council, acting individually, agreed to send letters to the Board of Trustees endorsing David P. Roselle, provost of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, for the UK presidency.

Robert T. McCowan, chairman of the Board of Trustees and the 10-member presidential search committee, said a successor to President Otis A. Singletary would be chosen at tomorrow's board meeting.

"Wethington's strength is clearly in his longtime relationships with political leaders in Kentucky. Roselle's is clearly in academics," said Bradley Canon, a member of the Senate Council.

"In my opinion the strength we need the most is the one Roselle has," he said.

Roselle, 47, has drawn considerable support from UK faculty members because of his academic background.

"I think academic leadership is the most important criterion here and I think anyone who provides academic leadership will better be able to represent the University in the political arena," said Jo Ann Rogers, president-elect of the UK chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

AAUP's executive board supports Roselle's candidacy for president, Rogers said.

Wethington said Friday at a press conference in the faculty club that his experience working with Kentucky politics would give the University an edge in obtaining funding.

"I know the leadership of the General Assembly, and I believe I'm able to work effectively with people in the state who are important to the well-being of this University, particularly as it relates to funding," he said.

Roselle has also received the endorsement of more than 80 faculty members in the College of Engineering.

But Wethington has not been without his supporters. Last fall, the directors from each of the 14 community colleges signed a letter and sent it to the search committee, said James C. Shires, director of Maysville Community College.

Faculty from the community college have also sent a letter to the committee endorsing Wethington's candidacy, Shires said.

Wethington, 51, said he could not be successful as the University's president without a solid relationship with the UK faculty.

"If I wasn't successful with faculty, I don't think I would be where I am today," he said.

Student leaders divided over second candidate

Most student leaders agree that the new UK president needs to lead the University in a new direction.

However, they don't all agree that Charles T. Wethington Jr. is the man to do it.

"He didn't address specific issues very well at all," said John Menkhaus, Student Government Association fine arts senator. "He didn't really address any need for change."

Menkhaus was one of about 27 students who met with Wethington Friday. Wethington, who is chancellor for UK's community college system, is one of two finalists for the UK presidency.

The other finalist, David P. Roselle, provost for Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, met with the same group on Thursday.

Ken Walker, Student Development Council vice chairman, agreed with Menkhaus, saying that Wethington is "a man coming from within the system that's reluctant to change."

Walker said UK always waits for other benchmark institutions to make changes before it does.

"I've always thought the University sat around and waited for change," he said. UK should anticipate change and not wait on other institutions.

Susan Brothers, SGA senator at large, said that Wethington was "accepting of the status quo."

Wethington's strongest attribute is lobbying because of his experience within the University, Brothers said.

What UK needs, though, is a strong emphasis on academics, she said. Roselle, she said, provides that emphasis.

Chair hoping to recommend one candidate

By FRAN STEWART

Robert T. McCowan, chairman of the 10-member presidential search committee, wants the panel to recommend one candidate for the presidency at tomorrow's Board of Trustees meeting.

McCowan, chairman of the board, plans to recommend either Charles T. Wethington Jr., chancellor for UK's community college system, or David P. Roselle, provost for Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

Wethington and Roselle have spent the past few days meeting with administrators, faculty, students and board members.

The candidate chosen would succeed President Otis A. Singletary, who will retire June 30 after 18 years at UK.

About 23 trustees, including those newly appointed and those replaced, met with the two finalists at separate receptions Saturday. For many of the board members, it was their first chance to meet with Roselle.

Ronald G. Geary, one of the seven trustees who was replaced by Gov. Martha Layne Collins, said he knew Wethington from his previous experience at the University. But "I think they're both very personable."

"At this point, I'm going to wait to see who the search committee recommends at the board meeting," he said.

The different components of the University were well-represented on the search committee, Geary said. For this reason, "at this point I'm leaning toward embracing their recommendation."

Geary is one of two University trustees who have filed suit to retain their seats on the board.

Because of the pending lawsuit, Geary said he thought the voting would be handled similar to the way

Presidential forums scheduled for today

By BRAD COOPER
Assistant News Editor

A campuswide forum for UK faculty will be held this afternoon in response to complaints that surfaced last week about the search for a new UK president.

The forum, which will be held at 3 p.m. in the Worsham Theater, will give faculty members the opportunity to express their concerns about the search to faculty representatives on the 10-member search committee, said Wilbur Frye, a committee member.

The forum "was prompted by faculty to give the faculty the opportunity to discuss the mission of the University in relationship to the presidential candidates," said Frye, chairman of the University Senate Council.

In addition to the faculty forum, Student Government Association President Donna Greenwell, a member of the search committee, is sponsoring a session for students to give their input into the presidential selection process.

The student forum will be held at noon today in 115 Student Center. Neither candidate will be present for either forum.

Controversy about the presidential selection process was sparked last week when it was first reported that Charles T. Wethington Jr., chancellor for the UK community college system, and David P. Roselle, provost of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, were selected as finalists for the UK post.

Faculty members have criticized the search committee for not giving the faculty more input into the selection process.

Resolutions protesting the way the search was conducted were passed by faculty councils in the College of Agriculture, College of Arts and Sciences and the College of Business and Economics.

Student leaders want Burch as vice chancellor

By JAY BLANTON

The Board of Trustees is expected to name James Kuder, director of student relations services at Colorado State University, as the new vice chancellor for student affairs at its meeting tomorrow.

There's a group of student leaders, though, who want the BOT to choose someone a little closer to home.

Five student leaders have written all the trustees a letter stating the qualifications of Joseph Burch, dean of students and acting vice chancellor for student affairs. The students are asking that Burch be named the new vice chancellor.

The students also plan to attend the BOT meeting tomorrow to voice their recommendation.

The Kentucky Kernel reported on Feb. 20 that Kuder had been selected for the position after a search committee made a recommendation to Art Gallaher, chancellor for the Lexington campus.

Sources close to the search say that Gallaher will recommend Kuder to the board.

John Menkhaus, Student Government Association fine arts senator, said there were a number of reasons for writing the letters.

"I think Art Gallaher was very remiss in overlooking Burch," Menkhaus said. "I think he has the capabilities to run the division as well as anybody."

"Not only does he have a great deal of creativity and innovative ideas but he also sees the serious problems of the department."

Gallaher could not be reached for comment last night.

Menkhaus said the group is not launching an attack on Kuder. Instead, they are promoting the person who they believe is the best candidate for the position.

One of the reasons Burch wasn't chosen was that there were some possible biases against him on the search committee, Menkhaus said.

Last-second heroics help Cats sweep twin bill

Chapman, Madison lift UK past Mississippi, Oklahoma

By ANDY DUMSTORF
Sports Editor

A Hollywood movie writer could not have written a better script to the ending of a regular season.

First there was freshman Rex Chapman, twisting his body like a contortionist and hitting a 12-foot jumper with six seconds left to salvage a 64-62 win over Mississippi in the final Southeastern Conference game for both teams Saturday.

Then there was junior Richard Madison, taking an inbound pass from Chapman and banking in a shot with seven seconds left yesterday to push UK ahead of Oklahoma, 75-74.

After Ricky Grace missed a layup with one second left and the officials disallowed David Johnson's follow shot, UK claimed the upset of 12th-ranked Oklahoma.

"When the dust from the weekend sweep settled, Kentucky, which is resting on the proverbial NCAA tournament fence, almost assured itself of a bid to the SEC tournament with an 18-9 record.

And that's even if the Wildcats fail to repeat as the SEC tournament champion.

Eddie Sutton and his staff have four days to prepare for the tournament, which gets under way Thursday in Atlanta. Kentucky, the fourth-seeded team in the tournament, will open postseason play Friday against Auburn, which blitzed LSU yesterday.

But that's in five days. UK can afford to gloat as it prepares to take on a team it has already beaten twice.

Kentucky's last-second antics turned what could have been an ending misery into a postseason promise.

Chapman's shot Saturday left Sutton grinning from ear-to-ear. Asked how often Chapman can make such an important basket, the beaming Sutton said, "Anytime he needs to."

"Chapman is great," Mississippi coach Ed Murphy said. "We couldn't have made him take a tougher shot. We did a good job those last seconds."

Chapman's heroics were made necessary because of an eight-point run by Mississippi in the closing minutes of the game.

As far as Murphy was concerned, his team could not have done anything more in the last nine seconds of the game—except win.

Mississippi had the lead, 63-62, for the first time since early in the contest and was playing tough defense.

Behind by seven with 3:39 left, Roderick Barnes started the Ole Miss run with a 14-foot jumper.

Joe Ayers added a short jumper and Barnes put in the last of his 12 points to cut the lead to one, 62-61.

Ronnie Sims ended the Ole Miss scoring and gave the Rebels the lead with a layin, the last of his team-high 18 points, setting the stage for Chapman.

"(The shot) felt pretty good," UK's freshman sensation said.

Yesterday, Sutton went to a new play of sorts to offset the Sooners.

Kentucky called a timeout with nine seconds left after gaining possession on a jump ball, trailing 74-73.

The inbound play the Wildcats set up was one they had worked to perfection in practice but had never pulled off in a game.

Madison was to set up on the free-throw line and float toward the basket, yelling to distract the Sooners.

The distraction failed, Chapman zipped a pass to the wide-open Madison and a layup gave Kentucky win No. 18.

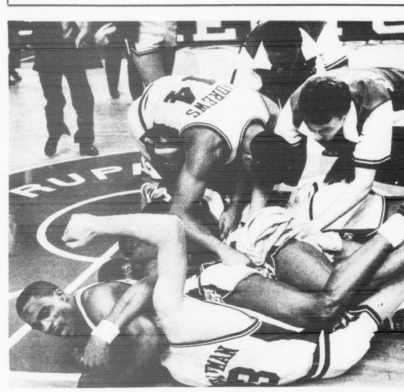

"They didn't have weak-side help so I was open," Madison said of the decisive play. "We tried it in practice and it always worked."

Chapman said, "We just had to go with a play we knew would work because we didn't have any time. I just waited for the play to develop and he was wide open."

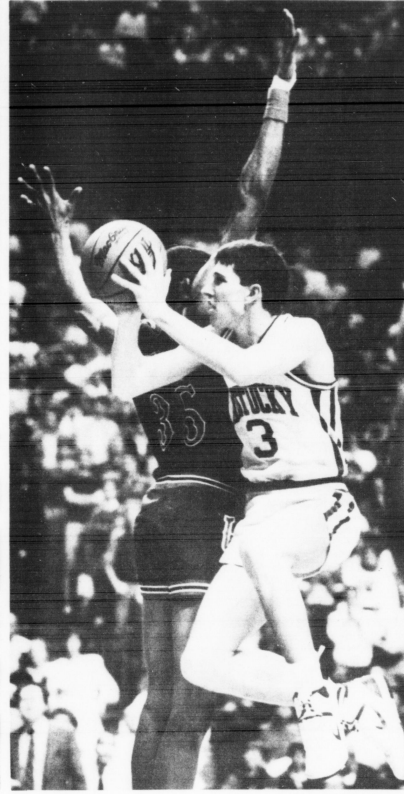

Kentucky now hopes that more good fortune is written into its script as postseason play draws near.

Georgia spoils Lady Kats senior finale

Lady Kat seniors Melanie Warren, Sandy Harding and Debbie Miller share the spotlight before their last home game.

By C.A. DUANE BONIFER
Staff Writer

It looked like the Lady Kats were finally going to do it. Down only two points to the sixth-ranked Georgia Lady Bulldogs early in the second half, the Kats appeared to be right in the ball game.

But then it happened.

With 16:37 left on the clock, Sandy Harding committed her fourth foul when she was called for charging in front of the UK bench.

Harding was forced to the bench, and Georgia took that opportunity to go on a 14-6 tear.

By the time Harding re-entered the game at the 10:08 mark, the momentum had already shifted to the Lady Bulldogs. They went on to post a 73-64 win over the Kats, Friday at Memorial Coliseum.

"When Sandy got her fourth foul and went out, I thought that was the turning point in the game," UK coach Terry Hall said. "We just depend on her so much."

Georgia coach Andy Landers, however, begged to differ with Hall.

Instead, the eight-year veteran coach said the key was his team finally displaying its offensive capabilities.

"In the second half," Landers said, "we finally began to settle down and run our offense better."

UK, now 3-6 in the Southeastern Conference, 16-10 overall, will be forced to play on the first night of the SEC tournament. No team has ever opened on the first night and won the tournament.

Georgia improved its final season record to 24-3, while clinching second place in the SEC with a 7-2 mark.

UK made a final run at the Lady Bulldogs late in the game and narrowed the gap to four, but the Kats forced many of their shots and missed several baskets underneath.

"We had a chance," Hall said, "but I think at the end, we were in such a hurry to catch up that we rushed our shots and tried to catch up with just one shot."

Another factor contributing to Georgia's winning effort was the play of senior center Katrina McClain.

The All-American center finished one point below her average at 25 and pulled down a game-high 12 rebounds.

"Is she awesome or what?" Hall said. "She's everywhere. She has no weaknesses."

UK was led by Bebe Croley, with 17 points, and Jodi Whitaker, who clipped in 16. Harding was the third Lady Kat to hit double-digits with 13.

Rugby team beats IU; UK tennis team sweeps

Staff reports

The Kentucky rugby team clobbered Indiana Saturday 32-0 during a solid downpour in Bloomington, Ind., to improve its record to 4-0.

The Kentucky team was led by senior Bill Carmichael, who scored on three attempts.

The rugby team travels to Fort Knox Saturday to take on Illinois.

UK women's tennis team swept two matches this past weekend, improving its record to 6-2 on the season.

Friday, the Wildcats shut out Alabama, 9-0, Saturday, UK blanked William and Mary, 9-0. Both matches were at the Hilary J. Boone Indoor Tennis Center.

UK was led by Sonia Hahn, who recorded two victories at the No. 1 singles spot.

Hahn won in two straight set matches. She beat Alabama's Beth Marrow, 6-3, 6-3, and Namratha Appa-Rao of William and Mary, 6-0, 6-0.

Hahn teamed with Tamaka Takagi to knock off Alabama's No. 1 doubles team of Lynne Cleary and Michele Morton, 6-2, 6-2. Saturday, the UK No. 1 doubles came from behind to beat Julie Kazcmaevk and Danielle Webster, 6-7, 6-1, 6-1.

Takagi knocked off Alabama's Cleary at the No. 2 singles, 6-0, 6-1, and countered Saturday over Kazcmaevk 6-2, 7-5.

UK's Beckwith Archer lost only four games in two outings at the No. 3 singles position, she beat Alabama's Kay Thayer, 6-1, 6-1, and William and Mary's Cynthia Mitchell, 6-1, 6-1.

UK's next home match is March 13 against Texas A&M at 1 p.m.

Kentucky gymnasts have record-setting outing

By WARREN HAVENS
Contributing Writer

The UK gymnastics team had a banner day Saturday at Memorial Coliseum as it broke four UK records on the way to a rout of Iowa State and Eastern Michigan.

Kentucky racked up a 183.55 as it outdistanced Iowa State, 178.65, and Eastern Michigan, 176.8.

UK's total surpassed its previous mark of 182.7, set against Rhode Island last season.

The seven Kentucky performers set 20 of a possible 28 individual season bests, and as a team broke three of a possible five team highs for 1987. Each of the gymnasts' vault and floor exercise scores were personal season bests.

Kentucky shattered the old floor exercise record with a 47.0. The previous high was a 45.85 set against Eastern Michigan in 1985.

Individual record breaking hysteria broke out for Kentucky in the floor exercise.

Freshman Janet Denker opened UK's rotation with her first ever score of 9.0. Only four UK gymnasts had posted a 9.0 or better in seven meets.

Sophomore Diane Sill followed with a 9.25 that tied Kendall Lucas for the season's individual high.

The season record fell when junior Robin Leggett used two flawless double-backs to record a 9.35. It was the first time a UK gymnast had attempted two double-backs in the same routine.

So rare is the maneuver that UK coach Leah Little said she doesn't know of five collegiate gymnasts that use two in the same routine.

The emotion and excitement carried over as sophomore Theresa Schneider used a clean routine to post a 9.55. Schneider's score tied Lucas' school record set on March 9, 1985.

The success was contagious as freshman Su Su Seaman followed with a 9.25. Lucas needed to score only an 8.5 for UK to set the new team record.

When things had settled down, Lucas not only put UK over the old team score, but her 9.6 broke the individual record which had stood for almost two seasons.

Lucas said her performance was above par.

"After working out this week, I just felt my floor (score) was gonna get better," she said.

Lucas' 9.4 on the uneven bars equalled her school record that stood untouched since March 9, 1985.

Another heroine for Kentucky was Sill. Her 36.75 was not only a personal all-time high but was good for first place in the all-around honors. Sill set personal bests in each of her four events.

Lucas took second with a 36.7. Seaman, along with Iowa State's Debbie Bryant, tied for third with scores of 36.6.

Lucas, who holds the UK record in the all-around, a 37.4 set in 1985, posted the season's best all-around score last weekend at Auburn with a 36.9. Sill's victory marked the first time this season that a teammate had topped Lucas in a meet.

Each of Kentucky's all-arounders posted a 36.0 or better. It was the first time in the UK's history that four gymnasts had done so.

'Menage' features bizarre comic situations, incredible acting

By WESLEY MILLER
Assistant Arts Editor

Director/screenwriter Bertrand Blier is well-known for his ingenuity and bawdy unpredictability, as evidenced by past works "Les Valises" ("Going Places") and "Get Out Your Handkerchiefs," which won the 1978 Oscar for Best Foreign Language Film.

Blier's trademark zaniness is back as strongly as ever in "Menage," but this time the fun is not hindered by the mean-spiritedness or misogyny that has marred his past efforts.

"Menage" is the story of Antoine (Michel Blanc) and Monique (Miou-Miou), two lovers whose relationship has turned sour. Antoine loves Monique very much, but she has grown tired of her life of stagnant poverty.

Into their lives steps Bob (Gerard Depardieu), a flamboyant burglar who throws money around as if he stole it from a Monopoly game. Bob attracts the pair with his promise of a freer existence, a lifestyle that includes skipping from home to home, robbing their way to satisfaction.

However, it is not long before a peculiar menage a trois develops. Antoine still loves Monique, but she finds herself intrigued by the mysterious burglar. Bob, however, rejects her; he has eyes only for Antoine.

"Menage" then develops into an often comic, sometimes touching examination of relationships, whether they are between straights or gays. Blier's characters are sexual stereotypes, but their actions never become predictable or hackneyed. The three principle characters are thrown around from one bizarre situation to another, each wilder than the one before.

It is Blier's tendency to successively top each wild scenario that keeps the film from being a total success. The conclusion is, to say the least, an arbitrary one, depending on how much the viewer likes Blier's unconventional style.

What makes the film worth watching is the acting of the three principals. Blanc, who won the 1986 Best Actor Award at the Cannes Film Festival, has the toughest assignment as Antoine, who is the integral character in the triangle. The entire narrative rests on the credibility of his character, which stands until the final 10 minutes, when Blier throws all believability to the four winds.

Depardieu was the perfect choice for Bob, the macho, beefy ex-con whose taste for women disappeared during his 10-year stint in prison. He exhibits tenderness and extravagance equally well, not appearing even slightly ridiculous whispering to Antoine, "I've been waiting, quivering, as he lies in bed, wearing tight, leopard-skin shorts.

Miou-Miou is fabulous in the basically thankless role of Monique, who can only react helplessly as she watches Antoine turn away from her to Bob. She delivers some of the most poignant and thoughtful comments that Blier has ever penned.

"Menage" is a dizzying delight, mixing comedy, action and melodrama to form a uniformly unconventional Blier offering.

"Menage" is playing every night through Thursday at the Kentucky Theater. Although the film is unrated, it would undoubtedly be rated R for partial nudity, sexual suggestiveness and adult situations.

Bob (Gerard Depardieu) serves breakfast in bed to Antoine (Michel Blanc) and Monique (Miou-Miou) despite his affections for Antoine in Bertrand Blier's "Menage."

Cellist Onczay delights audience with emotional performance

By J.N. HOWELL
Contributing Writer

Hungarian cellist Csaba Onczay brought the audience to its feet in ovation on Friday evening at the UK Center for the Arts, when he played as guest of the Lexington Philharmonic.

After the Philharmonic's performance of Mozart's brief but rousing Overture to Don Giovanni, Onczay played two pieces, Kabalevsky's Cello Concerto No. 1 and Dvorak's Rondo in G Minor.

His first piece was an unanticipated pated commemoration of the Russian composer, whose death in Moscow early last week at the age of 82 was announced on Friday morning. Onczay's rendition of Kabalevsky's undeservedly least-known cello concerto was a perfect memorial.

CONCERT REVIEW

He combined the gypsy composer's essential lyricism with intense emotion, especially in the slow movement, to bring his rendition to the highest degree of reverence.

With Dvorak's Rondo, Onczay took his playing beyond technical precision with his fluid style and elicited a standing ovation from the audience. He followed this with a short encore, a Russian exceptional piece in which he produced an extraordinary variety of musical effects that simulated a full cello ensemble.

The last work of the concert, Cherubini's Sinfonia in D Major, was undoubtedly the most interesting. Conductor George Zack introduced this obscure composer to the audience as

"the Italian Beethoven."

Cherubini undoubtedly caused the orchestra the most work, too. As Zack told the audience: "Preparing this piece has been a long labor."

"Apparently," Zack said after the concert, "Cherubini stood so much in awe of Beethoven that he rewrote his Sinfonia for violins only."

To find the parts for the rest of the orchestra was, then, a marathon search for Zack. His inquiries took him to colleagues at Southern Methodist University and in the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra. The full score, copied down by a contemporary of Cherubini's, was finally found in Florida at the Kalmus Publishing House.

"It was almost unreadable," Zack said, "and full of wrong notes. Even during rehearsals, members of the orchestra were pointing out mistakes in the score."

Although no mistakes were apparent, Zack was still uncertain of the accuracy of his score, much of which he had to virtually compose himself by the time of the concert.

the University of Louisville trustees are conducting their meetings.

In that case, the board would cast two votes — one including the new members and one including the old members. If there is a consensus between the votes, there should be no problem, Geary said, but if the votes are different, the board may have to appeal for an immediate court ruling.

Wethington said the sooner the decision is made the better. "Everyone's got an interest in this task. In this position," he told the trustees during a reception Saturday morning at the Radisson.

He said that some people seem to imply that he needs to defend his years spent at UK.

"I don't apologize for any of my time at the University of Kentucky," he said.

Former Gov. A.B. "Happy" Chandler, a non-voting member of the board, said he was impressed with Wethington but said he did not know Roselle.

"I think you have good people, you should move them up," he said. "I don't think there's anything wrong with taking one of our own. If we can't raise someone to the top ranks in education, then it's a reflection on us."

"This has been a curious few days and really fun," Roselle told trustees during a reception at the faculty club Saturday afternoon. Roselle taught mathematics before becoming dean of the graduate school at VPI. Currently, his role as provost makes him chief academic officer at the institution.

Roselle was nominated for the presidency by Donald Sands, UK's vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Each candidate is qualified for the position in different ways, said Raymond Betts, a faculty representative on the board. He thinks the recommendation will depend on what the search committee thinks would best serve the University's long-range needs.

Betts said he has received several letters from faculty expressing their opinions concerning the candidates. "I think the expression of faculty concern is of interest."

Faculty members have shown opposition to Wethington because of his lack of scholarly background. Several faculty organizations have drafted resolutions endorsing Roselle as the next president.

Constance P. Wilson, a faculty representative on the board, said she has received phone calls and letters from faculty supporting Roselle.

"The board has heard from a lot of people, but most people on the board probably know what they're going to do," she said.

Wilson, who did not attend Saturday's receptions, said "there is clear but not unanimous" support for Roselle among faculty members. "Since I do represent faculty on the board, I do have to reflect their views."

However, Betts said there have been outstanding university presidents who have not had traditional academic credentials.

The fundamental purpose of a university is scholarship, Geary said. Therefore, student and faculty opinions should be considered.

Geary, however, views faculty and students as constituencies. He doesn't see Wethington's lack of scholarly achievement as a problem. "Faculty members have a more narrow approach" than the board, he said.

He said the board must consider "what's best for the school as a whole."

"I think it could be a negative if the faculty feels too comfortable with the president," Geary said. "I don't think you'd say Dr. Singletary and the faculty have had a honeymoon, but they've been able to move forward."

"I'm a faculty person," said Nicholas Pisacano, a biology professor who is one of the newly appointed board members. "I think faculty has to be heard. They're the ones who have to work for him."

Pisacano said the board would probably decide on a new president tomorrow, but as a new board member, "I was hoping they'd wait another month."

Robert McCowan, chairman of the Board of Trustees and head of the search committee, said he thinks the faculty's complaints will be answered before a new president is selected.

"I don't consider it a problem," McCowan said. "I think their concerns will be resolved before this thing is over."

McCowan said he thought the forum "was fine if they want to do that," but issued a reminder in saying, "I think they (faculty) need to keep in mind how much time and effort has been put into this."

"People in the search committee have dedicated long hours to this," he said.

Some members of the faculty are uncertain about what impact the forum will have on the selection of a new president.

Bradley Canon, a member of the Senate Council, said he has doubts about the outcome of the faculty forum on the selection process.

"In my opinion, most of the criticism of the process has been misplaced," Canon said. "I think the search committee has made every reasonable effort to find a suitable candidate and its effort can't be faulted."

This afternoon's forum is open to faculty members from both the Lexington campus and the community college system, Frye said.

Burch

"I've heard various reports from individuals close to the committee who alluded to the fact that certain individuals on that committee not only entered with the desire to bring in an outside individual," Menkhaus said, "but some may have in fact had personal problems with the current acting vice chancellor for student affairs."

Lynne Hunt, Student Activities Board president and a member of the committee, said she commends the students for expressing their opinion.

However, she declined comment on possible committee biases, saying "anything that was said can't leave the room for comment."

Tina Payne, SAB vice president, said she "personally hopes that this will have an influence on the (board's) decision."

Burch said he appreciated the students' attitudes toward him, but "I guess I feel like the decision has been made... by the chancellor."

Burch, though, wanted to make clear that the letter-writing was not encouraged by him. "I certainly wouldn't want the board members to think I have," he said.

Susan Brothers, SGA senator at large, said, "I don't see how the board could pass (Burch) over."

"I just hold to the hope that they have a genuine interest in the opinion of students," she said.

Raymond Betts, a faculty representative on the BOT, said he would examine the students' recommendation because student opinion "should be seriously considered."

Betts, however, said he assumed that there had been "ample opportunity" for student input into the selection process.

Two other students writing letters — Cyndi Weaver, SGA arts and sciences senator, and Mindy Martin, SAB public relations chairwoman — could not be reached for comment last night.

UK board members must consider letters before appointment

When members of the Board of Trustees meet tomorrow, one issue they will be expected to finalize is the appointment of UK's vice chancellor for student affairs.

That appointment is expected to be James Kuder from Colorado State University, but not if several student leaders have anything to say about it.

Five student leaders will ask board members to reconsider the decision made by Art Gallaher, chancellor for the Lexington campus, following a recommendation made by the vice chancellor search committee.

Although the board's approval sometimes is seen as a rubber stamp on a committee recommendation, this case deserves special attention.

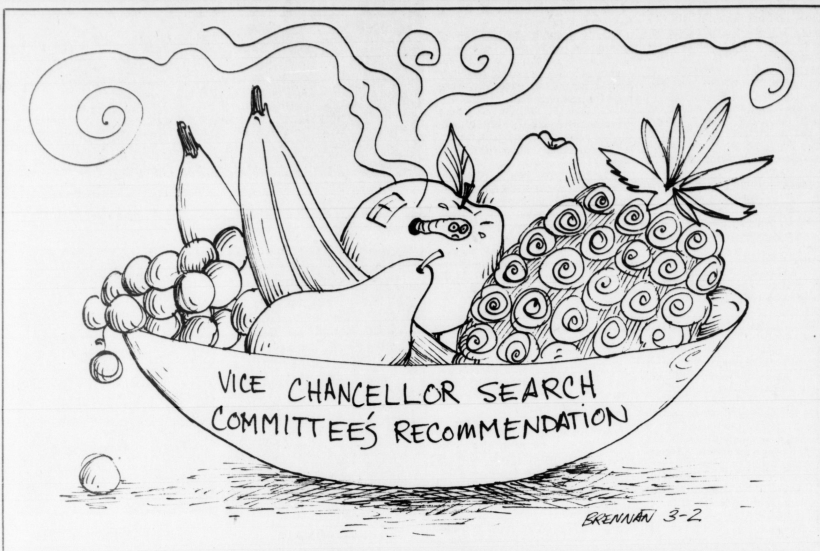

Letters from student leaders asking that Dean of Students Joseph Burch be appointed vice chancellor deserve serious consideration, not because of who they're recommending, but because students are questioning the committee's recommendation.

The position of vice chancellor for student affairs is the most important administrative position where students are concerned because the person in this position works directly with the students. Also, students need a strong friend and advocate in that position.

Because students are going to most affected by this appointment, their opinions are especially important in this decision.

The students who submitted letters to the board have worked closely with Burch throughout their years at UK and believe he would be the best person for the job.

Whether this opinion is true isn't the issue. The issue is — did the committee consider each candidate equally and fairly for the vice chancellor? These students don't think so.

Those students questioning the decision contend that members of the search committee may have been biased against Burch.

If the allegations concerning some committee members' opinions are true, then the process has been undermined and the board should re-evaluate the recommendation.

Campus voice

More often than not, students ignore opportunities to influence administrative decisions

If you bother to read farther down this page, you'll find an excerpt from a recent editorial that appeared in the student newspaper at Ball State University. The topic of that editorial concerns a new addition to the university — open campus forums.

Funny how some things are just taken for granted. Here at UK, such forums are no strangers to this campus, but what often seems to be a stranger to these forums is participation — from students.

We in the press, and other student leaders, take for granted that when candidates for top University positions are being interviewed or issues concerning students are being discussed, students have as much right to be included in the decision-making process as administrators do. Thus, editorials appear in the Kernel, signs are put up around campus or invitations are sent out telling students about upcoming forums. But the same result always occurs. Few students — other than those of us covering the event or sponsoring it — show up. Tomorrow, five student leaders will go before the Board of Trustees asking that Dean Joseph Burch be named vice chancellor for student affairs. This request comes after a decision made by Art Gallaher, chancellor for the Lexington campus, and a recommendation from the search committee that James Kuder from Colorado State University be given the position.

What these students are attempting to do has some merit but may be too late. As it stands, Burch's chances of being named vice chancellor don't look good.

If ever there was a need for student participation, it was in the search for a new vice chancellor for student affairs. This position is a kind of link between the student body and the administrative elite. We need someone in this position who understands us.

But students were given a chance to participate. The search committee sponsored open forums when each of the five candidates for that position came to campus to be interviewed. And each time, fewer than 20 students showed up.

When we don't show support or even interest, how can we expect our representatives to speak for us?

Two of the most important positions at this University may very well be filled by the time the board meeting ends tomorrow, but how many students have been following the events and decisions that will certainly have a definite effect on the future of UK? And how many really care?

If the numbers are small, then perhaps we shouldn't concern ourselves with such trivial matters as who will take over the reins of this University or who will be our administrative voice, and instead concentrate on ways to get through college with as little extra effort as possible. And if that's the case, then why worry about having a voice on campus at all? If students aren't interested in being party to decisions that directly affect them, what difference does it make if opportunities to meet candidates or help reach decisions aren't offered?

Who cares, right? Well I care, and I'd like to think that most students do, too. I hope we're not just here to get a degree and never look back. I'd like to think that some of the rights our student representatives fight for will be around for a long time, but if students simply sit by and let everyone else make decisions for them, then they have no right to complain.

Students at Ball State University seem relieved that they finally have the opportunity to hold open campus forums because their administrators have had a tendency to forget they exist. I hope that students at UK would never let that happen.

LETTERS

Man, God unequal

It was speculated on the "CBS Evening News" recently that the millions of fish and many birds that have died at Carson Sink, east of Reno, Nev., was "the result of separate acts of man and nature combined to create a unique slaughter."

Well, we know that man can't do anything right, i.e., guns, bombs, Star Wars and females' pants; but why bring God down to our level? But he won't let us forget him, so he gives us UFOs, beached whales and Ronald Reagan.

I submit that God has a big job keeping all the naturally curious people busy trying to figure out nature, and we shouldn't impugn him for worrying us.

But I'm surprised that the Sink tragedy isn't heralded as a sign from God that the End of Hell is at hand. Not the end of the world, mind you, but the end of the combined efforts of science and technology for domination.

Remember when two atom bombs were dropped on Japanese civilians? That was to study the long-term effects of radiation on all ages.

But judgment must begin at the house of God. That's where people show off their wealth, you know, and where children are trained to give money to God, and to lie and say they're saved, or born again. But one must first die to be born again.

In their opinion . . .

Dry rush smart move

The following editorial appeared in the Pitt News on Feb. 18.

The fraternities at Pitt have expressed concern recently about the crackdown on the Penn State fraternities' drinking problems.

When dry rush was implemented, there was an outcry but the houses complied. As a result, there was much less drinking, and the Pitt fraternities earned a reputation for responsibility concerning alcohol. And a welcome change it is.

No longer are there stories floating down the hill about drunken revels, and the whole image of the fraternities has been enhanced as a result.

With dry rush, we have gained a new respectability, one that was much needed.

Additionally, with dry rush also comes safer conditions from a legal point of view. A fraternity — as well as the university — can be held financially responsible in a court of law for the injuries suffered by a student who got drunk at a fraternity party.

Preventive medicine — such as dry rush — keeps all the parties involved out of compromising positions.

If our fraternities continue to have the attitude they have shown this year toward the use of alcohol, we will never have to worry about the same sort of thing at Pitt.

The drinking age is a law — not just a good idea — and it is refreshing to see it treated as such on the campus.

Open forums necessary

There exists an idea on campus so radical — for Ball State — that it is hard to believe it was ever implemented.

The idea is the open forum. The idea is a good one, since it allows members of the campus community who are interested in its guidance to meet with and ask questions of those who might be planning their future. Faculty can discover the priorities of those who might become their superiors in the university chain of power, and students can meet people who possibly might have an impact on their education and the quality of campus life.

Candidates for positions such as dean of a college or vice president of the university are sometimes put on the spot, but their answers are often revealing. How well-prepared an individual is to face the public can be an indicator of how seriously he is considering the post.

On a campus where trustees and the president openly admit their dislike for "sunshine laws" and where many meetings and most searches are closed, to be able to attend an open forum is refreshing.

an interest in who the next president is," he said.

"I'm an effective spokesman for the University," he said. "I think I know who the players are in the state."

Faculty members have criticized Wethington for his lack of scholarly background. He taught educational psychology at UK from 1965-66 before becoming director of Maysville Community College.

Wethington, however, said he has maintained a good relationship with faculty.

He said it's natural for faculty to be concerned about his lack of traditional academic experience, but "my relationships with faculty are sound and they're strong."

Wethington said he would be an accessible president. "That's my style," he said. "As chancellor of the community college system or as president of the University, I would have the kind of administration that you as a student would get to see me."

"We both feel like the very life of the University is the students," said Judy Wethington. "We both feel very strongly that (the president) is not in an ivory tower."

This emphasis on accessibility is evident in his dealings with the community colleges, according to Erika Fruchtenicht, student government president at Jefferson Southwest Community College.

"Students have been known to grab him by the arm and state their case," she said.

Wethington said he sees a need to place emphasis on student affairs because the non-academic events often determine how well students do at UK and whether they stay.

He said he would welcome student input in the decision-making process. "If I've had a problem, it's with getting more student involvement, not less."

Students should also have input into faculty evaluations, Wethington said.

"I think that student evaluation plays a significant role in the evaluation of faculty at the community college system," he said. "I believe that the student opinions are valid, serious and they ought to be considered."

His views on athletics are that UK should do its best to be its best.

"I think intercollegiate athletics are now and should be a part of this University," he said, "as long as that's not the tail wagging the dog."

Academics and athletics should exist side by side, he said. "To me there is no either-or."

Wethington said he is committed to the basic structure of the University. He said as an administrator, his perceptions of the chancellor system are that "it is working well."

Wethington said obvious problems of the University are funding and cutbacks in funding.

However, when asked about tuition increases, Wethington said he is concerned about the increases because tuition is one of the determining factors in whether students stay in school.

"I'm a low tuition pusher," he said. "I think low tuition is the single best financial aid you can offer a student."

Wethington turned aside comments that the University needs a president with new ideas from outside the system instead of an internal leader by saying that new people with new ideas are always coming in from outside.

"We're going to constantly get new ideas," he said. A president must have an attitude receptive to change that would attract people with new ideas.

The University needs a person with the ability to recognize excellence and get the right people involved, he said.

Activities Board president, disagreed with the perception that Wethington's experience within UK means an unwillingness to change.

"I think that's a natural perception to have when you look at an internal candidate," Hunt said. However, the opposite case may be true.

Wethington, because of the long time he's been at UK, has not had a chance to make decisions that would be considered innovative or progressive, she said.

In the position of UK president, though, Hunt thinks he would make changes that are needed.

David Botkins, SGA senator at large, said Wethington's familiarity with "the entire operation of how UK works" would, in the long run, be most beneficial, particularly in lobbying.

Wethington "knows how to play the game of higher education as far as lobbying," Botkins said. Someone from Virginia is not going to have that influence, he said.

As far as the criticism that Wethington would be unwilling to change, Botkins thought Wething-ton's leadership would be "very progressive."

"I'm one of the biggest advocates of change," Botkins said. And Wethington "came across to me as a very flexible person."

Jim Hanna, a graduate student in education, said he's glad he doesn't "have to make the choice," but if he had to make a decision, he would lean toward Roselle because of his academic background.

Hanna added that he sensed a "real undercurrent of support for Roselle."
