BOT reviews UK's response to allegations

The University's response to the NCAA Allegations almost blocked the view of President David Roselle yesterday at the Board of Trustees meeting. The board reviewed the eight-binder report in closed session.

BOT members meet for more than three hours for University briefing

Completing what UK President David Roselle termed an "important step," the UK Board of Trustees and Athletics Association Board of Directors reviewed the University's response yesterday to allegations against the men's basketball program.

The response, contained in eight thick binders, was expected to be mailed to the NCAA this morning.

"It's an important step, a very important step," said Roselle, following a more than three-hour meeting of the BOT. "My guess is that the sooner it's out of here the better everyone will feel."

Controversy over the contents of the University response swelled Saturday and yesterday as the state's leading newspapers — the Lexington Herald-Leader and the Louisville Courier-Journal — ran stories that painted differing pictures about UK's response.

The Herald-Leader, quoting two unnamed sources Saturday, said the University in its response accepts responsibility for the $1,000 Emery package and charges of academic fraud surrounding the college entrance exam of Eric Manuel.

The NCAA alleges that last April assistant basketball coach Dwane Casey sent $1,000 in an overnight Emery package to the father of then-recruit Chris Mills. That allegation is the first of 18 against the men's basketball program.

The other allegations range in severity from offering illegal cash payment to a recruit to free transportation and tickets to others.

Yesterday, however, The Courier-Journal, quoting three unnamed sources, said the University has been unable to determine whether Casey sent the money to Mills' father.

Although the boards were briefed on the response in a closed session lasting more than two hours yesterday, the response apparently does not include potential staff changes.

In the part of the response labeled "corrective action," Roselle said the response does "detail what has been done to date." However, "we don't speculate further in that section."

UK Athletics Director Cliff Hagan resigned in November, citing the cloud over the athletics program created by the NCAA investigation. C.M. Newton, basketball coach at Vanderbilt University, was hired to replace Hagan last month.

Roselle also indicated yesterday that the board was briefed on additional information the University had gathered in its investigation separate from the NCAA's, saying the "briefing to the board was pretty comprehensive."

Following a speech in Louisville Thursday, Roselle said he did not know whether that information would constitute additional allegations against the basketball program.

Roselle said Thursday his investigation had found some "shortcomings" in the athletics program, which were being addressed through reorganization of the Athletics Association. But the president said he had not addressed all of the shortcomings in the basketball program.

Roselle said he still expects to be able to discuss the report with NCAA staff in early March, and appear before the NCAA Infractions Committee April 22-24 in Charleston, S.C.

Yesterday's closed session followed more than an hour of debate by board members about how and when to review the response.

Two motions about how the board would proceed with its review of the response by trustees Jerome Stricker and Larry Foryg were considered before the BOT went into closed session.

Foryg called for the board to go into closed session and review the response before mailing it to the NCAA.

Foryg said he did not see his motion as a "diminution of the trust and confidence that the board has placed in the administration of the institution."

And Foryg added that any attempt to make changes in the response while in closed session would be illegal, and would not be successful.

"The purpose of the closed meeting is not to attempt to alter or to subvert truth," Foryg said, "but is merely so that this board may perform what it believes is its obligation with regard to this celebrated matter."

On Oct. 9, the board unanimously passed a resolution supporting Roselle's handling of the investigation. The res-

Former UK trustee Henry "Cap" Hershey said yesterday during the taping of the television program "Your Government," that the Board of Trustees should have been better informed about the University's handling of the NCAA investigation.

Hershey, who was replaced last week on the board, told a four-member panel of journalists that UK President David Roselle has not been open with the board about his handling of the University's investigation of the 18 NCAA allegations of rules violations. That, Hershey said, has caused some resentment by trustees.

"There's some cracks in the armor down there right now," Hershey said. "I don't think everybody is exactly satisfied with the way things are going. Those trustees ... are doing the best job they can. And I think when they feel their opinions are not being listened to, they tend to resent it. That makes for a tough situation."

The segment aired on WLEX-18 yesterday at noon — one hour before the Board of Trustees met in closed session to review the University's response to the NCAA allegations.

Yesterday's meeting was prompted by a motion during a Jan. 24th meeting of the board to hold a special meeting to view the response the UK administration was sending to the NCAA.

"I think it has taken ... a lot of bickering to keep the board informed," Hershey said. "I think it took a 12-to-6 vote by the board to force him to educate the board as to the response."

Hershey said that the University's investigation of the matter should have been kept out in the open from the beginning.

"I'm not disappointed in the thoroughness of it," Hershey said. "I'm not disappointed in the fact that they don't want a program that's built on cheating and violations of the rules. I am just disappointed that it wasn't done in a more forthright manner. I think that would have eliminated a lot of our problems here in the last few weeks."

UK fails to move into first with an 84-72 loss

By BARRY REEVES
Staff Writer

ATHENS, Ga. — For the second straight week, UK had a chance to move into a first-place tie for the Southeastern Conference, but fell short.

The University of Georgia, a team picked to win the SEC, put UK's quest down again by a score of 84-72 yesterday before 9,812 fans here at Georgia Coliseum.

"The chances aren't going to come around very often," UK center LeRon Ellis said. "We had a chance to tie for the league lead for the second straight week."

UK fell into a tie for third place in the league at 6-4, one full game behind league-leading Louisiana State University (7-3). The Cats' overall record dropped to the 500-mark at 11-11.

Georgia improved to 13-8 overall, and 5-6 in the league.

With the UK Board of Trustees meeting in Lexington, the players said they found it hard to concentrate on basketball. The UK team heard about the meeting on CBS-TV before the game.

During halftime of the Georgetown-Villanova game, CBS announced that the "biggest story in college basketball today" is happening in Lexington.

"It is very hard for us to concentrate from game to game because of all the off-court distractions," UK guard Sean Sutton said. "This whole year has been different for a lot of us."

"I am sure it (the BOT meeting) didn't help us prepare very much for the game," said UK coach Eddie Sutton.

The Cats opened the game in good fashion when Sutton hit a driving layup with 9:03 remaining in the first half. UK took the lead at 18-16.

But only 13 seconds later, UK lost the lead for good when Lateral Green hit a three pointer to give the Bulldogs the lead at 19-18.

Green, a freshman point guard, finished with 15 points and seven assists. Green's basket keyed a Georgia run of 18-5 that put the Bulldogs in front for good.

"They hit some big-time shots during that run," the UK coach said. "We didn't think they would shoot as well as they did."

During the Bulldogs' run, UK went over the limit in fouls, which enabled Georgia to reach the bonus.

UK sent the Bulldogs to the line 31 times, and Georgia hit 83.9 percent of their attempts for 26 points. By contrast, UK shot only 10 free throws for the game.

"One thing we didn't want to do is put them on the foul line because they are a very good free throw shooting team," Eddie Sutton said. "And they made us pay."

Georgia's junior center Alec Kessler, went to the free throw line 17 times and made 14. Kessler led all scorers and rebounders with 22 points and 13 rebounds.

"Kessler, if I am not mistaken, has been to the line more than anybody in the conference," Eddie Sutton said. "He is a tremendous basketball player."

"I will be surprised if he is not an extremely high (NBA) draft choice when he leaves Georgia," Ellis added.

Georgia, which hit 5 of 6 three pointers in the first half, took UK by surprise in hitting their outside shots.

"In the first game, they didn't hit their outside shots," Sean Sutton said. "Tonight, they hit them."

UK, down by 12 points with 1:50 left in the first half, cut the lead to nine by half-time to pull within striking distance.

"We were sitting good (and) we still believed we could win the game," said Sean Sutton, who fouled out with six points and five assists.

UK, playing with more enthusiasm than they did in the first half, made several runs at the Bulldogs in the second half, but could get no closer than six points.

"In the second half we came out with a lot more aggressiveness, but it was too late," said UK forward Chris Mills, who scored 14 of his 19 points in the second half.

"We made several runs at them in the second half, but we couldn't quite get over the hump," Eddie Sutton said. "Today, I think Georgia could've beaten anybody in the SEC."

UK had yet another poor performance on the boards yesterday. They were out-rebounded by a 35-28 margin.

The Bulldogs pulled down 19 offensive boards.

Registrar is improving Add-drop

By MICHAEL L. JONES
Staff Writer

Despite the long lines and a wait of up to three hours for some students during Add-drop, University Registrar Randall Dahl said that registration for the spring was a success.

"Overall, it went really well," Dahl said. "The larger context needs to be reinforced."

Dahl said that although there is room for improvement, the University's new computerized registration process, the Student Information System, decreased the time it took most students to add and drop classes.

By 12 Thursday (during Add-drop week), we had the wait down to an hour, by 3 it was 30 minutes," Dahl said.

One of the improvements Dahl has made in the program is a Registration Planning Group. The group, which includes Dahl and a member of each college, will meet monthly to discuss structural changes that need to be made in the Add-drop process.

"SIS is revolutionary," Dahl said. "It's still in the development stages of Add-drop."

Some of the changes that the members are discussing are shortening the time needed for advanced registration, and an earlier Add-drop before the advanced registration and the schedule adjustment period.

Dahl said part of the problem with Add-drop was the students' lack of knowledge on how the SIS works. Dahl said that the schedule adjustment period at the end of

Cool Cats ice Emory with sweep

By BOB NORMAN
Staff Writer

The UK Cool Cats, ignited by consistent play from senior Keith Kocan, took two games over visiting Emory University this weekend to help further a late-season drive toward a division championship.

UK's two victories were relatively easy, with a 5-2 thumping Saturday at midnight followed by a 5-3 win yesterday morning at the Lexington Ice Center.

But Kocan, his second-place team 8-7-1 after the weekend's games, was not sitting pretty following the second game, which was played only eight hours after the first contest ended.

"We probably could have played better," said Kocan, who had five goals in the two games. "We were a little stiff and sore. We practically just got off the ice from last night."

The Cats nevertheless controlled both contests behind offensive weapons Kocan and Craig Penn, who scored one goal in each game. Goalie Kurt Roberts held up the defensive end, as he thwarted the majority of Emory's scoring opportunities.

UK, however, had to overcome a disastrous 17 penalties in the first game. Emory was assessed with only six penalties.

But Roberts still managed to

The UK Cool Cats took two games over visiting Emory University at the Lexington Ice Center this weekend. UK won 5-2 midnight Sunday and followed that later in the morning with a 5-3 win.

hang on during the Emory power plays — barely.

"You have to have the goaltending and some luck," Roberts said.

John Beaugreard, who scored a goal in the first game, blamed the officials for the lopsided number of penalties.

"It was an aggressive game," Beaugreard said. "But we got called for stuff that normally wouldn't be called. The game, though, was intense."

The second meeting lacked the same intensity — and audience. The game was played before less than 40 spectators, while the midnight game had a crowd of more than 700.

"It always happens on Sunday mornings. It's tough to get off the midnight game and play hard when the crowd isn't there," Beaugreard said. "You play for the crowd a lot of times, and when they aren't there, it's a different kind of game."

Both victories, which were must-wins for UK, put the Cool Cats within striking distance of Georgia Tech, who is currently in the driver's seat of the Western Division of the Southern Collegiate Hockey Association.

Darrin Van Horn stuns IBF champ with upset victory

Associated Press

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Darrin Van Horn brought a patient fight plan and tons of respect into his bout with defending junior middleweight titleholder Robert Hines and the combination paid off for the UK junior.

Van Horn's decision to select his punches rather than exchange blows helped him secure a unanimous 12-round decision yesterday to become the new International Boxing Federation champion.

"I was in the best shape of my life and ready to fight as hard as I can," Van Horn said. "But when I came out, he was very strong inside and had a lot of quickness."

All Philadelphia fighters are sappers and I wanted to gain his respect, but in the first round, I realized I couldn't fight like that," he said.

Van Horn, 20, combined an effective defense and sharp counterpunching to beat Hines, 27, of Philadelphia. Forcing a last pace, Van Horn prevented Hines from setting up the right jab and straight left hand.

"I decided to sit back and counter punch," Van Horn said. "It was easier than I thought. By moving and making him come to me, I made him come up short on his jab. When he did that, he dropped his left hand and I was able to counter him."

Van Horn, 153½ pounds, is now 39-0 with 24 knockouts. Hines, 24-2 with 16 knockouts, lost in his first title defense.

"I'm not down on myself," said Hines. "He was just a better fighter today. For some reason I was sluggish. You just have those days once in a while. I'll be back."

Judge Gary Merritt scored the fight 118-110, while Chuck Giampa had 116-112 and Rocky Castellani 118-111 for Van Horn. The Associated Press scored it 117-112 for Van Horn.

Hines, 153 pounds, had captured the title by surviving two knockdowns to post a 12-round unanimous decision over Matthew Hilton last November in Las Vegas. Hines stifled Hilton's aggression behind a persistent jab and lateral movement.

Hines' title victory capped a three-year comeback for him. He left boxing in disgust after a 1984 knockout loss to Ricardo Bryant and a 1985 draw against James Greed.

Coaxed back into training as a sparring partner, Hines regained the incentive to fight.

Kats have excellent first half, but losing streak continues

By BRIAN JENT
Assistant Sports Editor

After a 92-70 loss to the fifth-ranked University of Georgia Bulldogs, the Lady Kat basketball team was not crying over its five-game losing streak or its disappointing 1-4 record in the Southeastern Conference.

Instead, the Kats were focusing their attention on their first-half performance.

"I could not ask any more out of a team than the way that we played in the first half," UK Coach Sharon Fanning said. "Even though I know we didn't hit as well as we need to hit, we played good team defense, and our perimeter people spotted and hit well."

How good was UK's first half?

Good enough to control an eight-point lead at the 5:34 mark and to enter the dressing rooms at the intermission tied at 44.

Although the Kats played Georgia even for a full 20 minutes, Georgia coach Andy Landers said he was not worried as long as his team kept its composure and remembered its game plan.

"I don't think that I was worried, but I was concerned," Landers said. "Concerned (that) if we didn't do the things that we talked about, we were in trouble."

When the Kats took the floor in the second half, their hope of an upset crumbled quickly as Georgia came out smoking, and UK came out cold.

"In the first half we were hitting and taking good shots," said

UK's Jodie Whitaker. "Second half, we came out cold, and they came out hitting. They got running, and they got going."

UK shot a frigid 37.5 percent in the second half, while Georgia shot a blistering 60 percent.

"We were getting the ball inside, but it's like we could not score," UK's Malinka Salhi said. "We tried to play inside."

"Kristi (Cushenberry) seems like the only one who scored," Salhi said.

Cushenberry, a freshman guard, equaled her career-high performance with 24 points, 16 of those coming in the first half.

"Cushenberry was doing exactly what they needed to do to win," Landers said. "She created something every time down the floor."

Second City is reminiscent of old 'SNL'

By MICHAEL L. JONES
Staff Critic

The famed Second City Improvisational Group brought its always unusual — but not always funny — show to the UK Student Center Ballroom Friday night.

The group, whose list of alumni is like a Who's Who of Comedy, performed a combination of old and new material. The inclusion of old material (written by former members) was the show's major flaw.

This is a generation raised on Saturday Night Live and Second City Television. When the troupe performs material written by cast members of those shows, it's already familiar, the jokes are old.

One example of that was the skit on modern lovers. A slightly overweight, wild and crazy John Belushi-type picks up a sweet, innocent-looking Loraine Newman-type in a bar. Of course, she is shocked that he thinks her coming home from the bar with him means that she will sleep with him, too.

The show was split into two parts by a 10-minute intermission, and the second half was the funnier of the two.

"Mao" was a skit that made fun of the predictable Ward Cleaver image of television fathers. In this skit, dad goes crazy and pulls a gun on his sons because they have skipped school for three weeks.

The funniest skit, however, was the last. Cast member Jackie Hoffman came out and told the audience about her great love for the "Brady Bunch." As a tribute, the group did a send-up of Jefferson Airplane's "White Rabbit," changing the lyrics to praise the Brady's housekeeper, Alice, rather than Alice in Wonderland.

In an interview the day before the show, Hoffman said the new Second City Group is just as talented as the alumni. She was right, but wouldn't it make more sense to let the new actors have the same creative freedom the older members enjoyed?

Second City is a fun group to see, if just for the nostalgia it evokes. But this is a cast of comic actors with more to offer than the fact that John Candy used to be in the group. These people are the future stars of American comedy. With a crop of comedians like this, even the most cynical critic should look forward to that future.

Selleck's latest is a poor excuse

By ROBSENG
Arts Editor

Although canceled last year, "Magnum P.I." remains one of my all-time favorite television shows, right up there with "Cheers," "The Rockford Files" and "The Night Stalker."

Naturally, I'm a Tom Selleck fan, and I was glad he finally got a commercial hit last year with "Three Men and a Cradle." However, if he keeps making films like "Her Alibi," Selleck may go scrambling back to the security of series TV pretty fast.

"Her Alibi" plays like a made-for-TV film that Selleck could have tossed off during a "Magnum" hiatus. It's a fairly entertaining way to waste an afternoon, but the film is marked by a somewhat implausible plot device that is followed up by some more improbable events.

Selleck plays Philip Blackwood, a mystery writer who hasn't written anything of substance since his wife left him four years earlier. His publisher insists that he needs to find a woman in order to get some of the edge back in his writing.

He finds them both when he sees Nina (played by Paulina Porizkova), a beautiful girl at a courtroom hearing who has been accused of murder. Obviously infatuated, he gives the police an alibi that the two have been having an affair and she was with him at his house at the time of the murder. The police don't buy Blackwood's story, but since they have no substantial evidence to hold her on, they release her.

In order to make his story stand up, Blackwood talks Nina, an exchange student from Romania, into staying at his house where he hopes to eventually learn the truth about the murder from her.

Scott is a scoring threat. Blackwood spies Nina playing with scissors (the murder weapon) and having an extremely sharp hunting knife, and he gets the nagging suspicion that she might be trying to kill him, too.

He really begins to believe his suspicions when Nina accidentally shoots him in the rear with an arrow. This is an embarrassing scene reminiscent of the kind of humor that "Three's Company" was famous for, mainly mistaken sexual innuendos.

Selleck displays his trademark charm and is easy enough to take as a romantic lead. He shows that he is capable of handling comedy, be it physical or of a more natural type, but the movie suffocates his attempts at comedy.

Porizkova is beguiling as Nina and shows there may be more to her career than Sports Illustrated swimsuit issues.

But, considering the film was directed by Bruce Beresford ("Breaker Morant," "Tender Mercies"), the whole proceedings seem somewhat subdued. Next time out, Selleck would do well to take a tip from his Magnum character and follow some better leads.

"Her Alibi," rated PG, is now playing at North Park and South Park cinemas.

BIGGEST & BEST SELECTION

Bush's S&L proposal expected on Thursday

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush isn't talking publicly about his plan to resolve the savings and loan crisis, but members of Congress and industry officials say what it's likely to include.

Bush met Saturday at Camp David, Md., with top advisers to go over their recommendations. He plans to reveal his decisions before Thursday when he delivers a nationally televised speech to Congress.

Industry officials and members of Congress who have spoken with the Treasury Department predict the plan will feature these elements:

- Borrowing, in the form of bonds, of up to $80 billion over the next several years. Congress' General Accounting Office recommends spending $85 billion over three years.
- A mixture of income sources, including taxpayer dollars and insurance premiums from S&Ls and banks, to pay the $7 billion to $9 billion in interest on the bonds.
- An administrative reshuffling that would include a separate apparatus to sell off insolvent S&Ls, a reorganized insurance fund for healthy S&Ls and a regulatory agency, perhaps under the control of the Treasury Department.

There has been little disagreement over borrowing the S&L cleanup money. The much more difficult problem is figuring out how to pay the interest on the bonds.

In the first week of the president's term, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady touched off a political firestorm by confirming leaks from Congress that the administration was examining a suggestion that depositors in banks and S&Ls pay a fee of about $2.50 for every $1,000 in their accounts.

Administration officials have refused to publicly disavow the controversial suggestion, but White House aides, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Friday they do not expect it to be in the administration's final package.

"That was a non-starter and I don't think you'll see that idea again," Senate Banking Committee chairman Donald Riegle, D-Mich., said yesterday on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley."

Instead, the insurance premiums paid by the institutions — currently 83 cents per $1,000 for banks and $2.06 for S&Ls — probably will be increased.

Not all legislators are rejecting the deposit fee. "I think you've got to put all sorts of things on the table. That can't be left out," Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., the Senate's minority whip, said yesterday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Commercial bankers have vociferously opposed being made to help pay for problems in a competing industry. They do not want any mingling of their insurance fund, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., with the S&L fund, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.

The FDIC has had its own less publicated and less severe problems. FDIC Chairman L. William Seidman told a group of Illinois bankers in Washington on Friday that the fund will report a balance of about $14 billion for the end of 1988, down from $18.3 billion at the end of 1987.

That's flush compared to the FSILC, which is broke. However, it represents the first annual decline in FDIC reserves since it began operating in 1934. The fund paid to close or merge 217 failed banks last year.

At $14 billion, the FDIC now has reserves representing 0.8 percent of the deposits it insures. Seidman told the bankers the ratio should be boosted to 1.25 percent, roughly a $7 billion increase.

One government official not directly involved in formulating the administration's plan, outlined a possible method for simultaneously building up the FDIC while freeing tax money for S&Ls.

Although premiums collected from banks are earmarked for the FDIC, they count immediately as revenue for the purpose of the overall budget.

So raising bank premiums would give the administration several billion more dollars a year to spend without adding to the budget deficit, the official said.

Another financing problem is how to sell the bonds without inflat-ing the government's already huge $2.7 trillion national debt.

A way around that is to cover the principal of zero-coupon bonds with several billion dollars in retained earnings at the regional Federal Home Loan Banks, which are owned by the industry. That way, only the annual interest paid on the bonds would be "on-budget."

One bailout model for mixing taxpayer and industry resources is the rescue of the Farm Credit System. That, too, involved selling bonds, in this case with a 15-year term. The Treasury pays the interest for the first five years. In the second five, taxpayers and the industry each pay half. After that, the industry pays it all.

Proposal to raise federal workers' salaries outrageous

Being a high-ranking federal official can be a high-pressure profession.

You have to make decisions that affect millions of citizens, put in a lot of overtime and make sure that your branch of government is efficiently run.

But that does not justify a proposal currently in Congress which would increase salaries for all federal officials by 51 percent — the largest pay hike in a decade. The idea will cost taxpayers at least $300 million.

The pay increase was voted down by the Senate 95-5 on Thursday, but unless the House of Representatives votes on it before Wednesday, the raise will take effect.

Friday, when 140 House Democrats arrived in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., to meet about legislative matters and play tennis, they were greeted at the train station by a small group of protesters who showed the congressmen their strong disapproval of the raise.

In a time of supposed fiscal austerity when we are all being encouraged by Washington to tighten our fiscal belts, it is obscene for our nation's leaders to even consider giving themselves a 51-percent raise.

What is even more outrageous is that the pay increase has been approved by presidents Reagan and Bush — the same people who were vehemently opposed to raising the minimum-wage standard by one-third.

House of Representatives Speaker Jim Wright said last week that he will ask Congress to decrease the raise to 30 percent, but even if that is approved, federal officials will be paid too much.

The argument for giving federal officials a raise is that they have gone too long without a pay increase, they have enormous responsibilities and that the cost of living is so high in the Washington D.C. area that they need more money in order to survive.

Without the raise, proponents argue, qualified people will be discouraged from entering into government service.

That argument has two problems.

First, the lowest-paid government official who will receive the benefits of this raise already earns $90,700 a year. Members of the House and Senate earn $89,500, majority leaders of the House and Senate take home $99,500 and the Speaker of the House receives a $115,000 paycheck each year.

Obviously, none of those people are living near the poverty line — or middle class for that matter.

Of course, federal officials may not be able to afford a home in Chevy Chase, Md., and they may not be able to belong to the most exclusive country clubs, but so what?

Being elected to Congress or appointed to the executive or judicial branches does not entitle one to a lifestyle of the rich and famous.

Although federal salaries may not be what top executives on Wall Street make, there does not seem to be any shortage of qualified candidates for Congress, the federal bench or the executive branch.

The advantages of working in government can be far more beneficial than the salary, as many former federal officials — Henry Kissinger, David Stockman, Walter Mondale — have demonstrated.

And even if members of Congress are so underpaid, perhaps keeping their salaries low might get rid of some of the incumbents — who have been in Washington since the days of the New Deal — and replace them with the fresh blood government is in dire need of.

Kernel Checklist

A weekly public service of the Viewpoint Page to help keep its readers abreast of the hot items in the universe.

➤ Card-Carrying Drivers. SGA Designated-Driver Cards. The Student Government Association began distributing "Designated-Driver Cards" to UK students last week. A branchchild of Senator at Large Amy Butz, the card allows students with the card to free non-alcoholic drinks at participating bars. Although it is unclear how effective the program will be, Butz's idea is one of the few examples of SGA serving students this year.

➤ Campus of Criminals. Milk Cartons. Amnesty has ended for people illegally possessing milk cartons. Anyone found with one can be fined $100-$300. Thousands of UK students have milk cartons by the dozens, and if the state wants to make some extra money it should raid the campus.

➤ Brother, Can You Spare $45,500? Federal Pay Raise. Members of Congress, after voting the nation into a $1.5 trillion fiscal deficit, think they deserve a raise for a job mediocre-done without voting on it. If Congress thinks it deserves a pay increase, then it should do what any employee does when he wants a raise — ask his boss. And in this case, the boss (the American people) says no.

➤ Let's Go To The Hop. Excelsior. The final touches are being put on the first campuswide formal. Tickets are only $20 a student couple, and men can rent a tux for less than $30. It may not be the best way to unite a campus and stir spirit, but the formal would be a nice way to spend a night on the town.

Hobby of greed

Collecting baseball cards has become a cutthroat industry

Things were so much simpler in 1977. A bunch of pre-pubescent kids were googly eyed over Farrah Fawcett, disco had yet to rear its ugly head and the "Big Red Machine" was still a force in baseball's pennant races.

Each spring back then brought the start of the baseball season and the arrival of the new baseball cards at the drugstore. I had spent all winter wasting time and money buying up "Charlie's Angels" and "Star Wars" cards, and I couldn't wait to start the trying task of getting all of the Cincinnati Reds cards I could snatch up.

I've gone through a lot of changes since then, maybe not all of them for the better, and the face of a hobby that consisted of nothing more than trading with my friends in the school cafeteria has changed, too. These changes, though, have definitely not been for the better.

Collecting baseball cards has gone from being an enjoyable way to regain some lost nostalgia to a potentially profitable business venture. Reports in magazines such as Consumer Reports have listed cards as "better investments than stamps, coins and even stocks and bonds."

As a result, the hobby gained an influx of fast-buck artists who were only in it for the money and could not care less about the player on the card, let alone the special feeling of attachment that one gets when he owns a card of a certain favorite player.

The hobby is still reeling from the effects of these people who, by their actions, took collecting cards out of the hands of those who deceived the most joy from it — namely, kids and those with a genuine love for the game of baseball. Their speculating has driven some cards out of the range of most kids' allowances.

A recent example is Jose Canseco's 1986 Donruss cards. In the span of only two months, the price of that card rose from $18 to $60. All that money for a piece of cardboard that is only two years old.

Adults aren't the only ones to blame here. A part of the blame has to be placed on the players themselves. A lot of people (myself included) see today's ballplayers as more loyal to the dollar than to the team (hence lucrative free-agent contracts). People thus reason that, since these players are making all this money off me, why not make a little of them?

I've also had plenty of kids come up to me at card shows and tell me who they ripped off some kid at school by trading him a 616 1988 Mark McGwire for a $60 Hank Aaron. What kind of faulty value system will a kid gain from that experience? Is this the same kid who, in the future, I might be buying a car from or who may be teaching my children in school?

The bottom line here is greed, and it has become a corruptive influence. People no longer think in terms of fair trade, but instead "Will I be able to make money off this deal?"

I'll have to admit that, since I've set up at shows in order to make money to pay off bills and buy some older cards I've always wanted, I've thought that way, too. Because of that, there have been times that I've become so fed up with mine and other people's behavior that I've considered quitting and selling off my entire collection.

The most recent example of how things can get out of hand in this seemingly innocent hobby is a Fleer card issued this year of Baltimore Oriole Billy Ripken. Seems that there's a profanity written in Magic Marker on the knob of his bat.

A few shipments got to recall and Fleer frantically tried to recall them. Nobody listened and recent reports have priced the card at anywhere from $50 to $165.

This all smacks of a carefully planned marketing scheme. Fleer in the past has gained a reputation for printing a limited supply in order to make the value of their product rise and be more desirable than the cards printed by their three competitors.

I just can't believe quality control at a company as large as Fleer would be so had to let something like this slip out.

I've seen the photographers here at the Kernel go over their pictures with a small magnifying glass to make sure everything is in focus. The profanity is clearly visible to the naked eye, so don't try to convince me that somebody at Fleer didn't catch it before it went to the presses.

The 1989 Billy Ripken baseball card issued by Fleer.

As a result of the recall, people who want to complete their collections will buy more of Fleer's second printing because they simply can't afford the prices being charged now. A store in Louisville made the Lexington news last week for charging $2.75 a pack. That's a $2.30 markup!

All of this brings us back to the kids. Pricing such as the above example has further removed them from the hobby. It's a novelty card, but what parent would really want their young child to have such a card?

There may be an obscenity on the card, but the real vulgarity here is greed.

Column was true

We would like to applaud Tim Fogle for bringing out the truth in his Jan. 30 "Tri My Pi" column.

Greek life is not bad when it is taken for what it really is — true friendship. However, more often than not, we see it used and abused as a quick-and-easy way to fit in with the so-called "in crowd."

Many of you saw those cliques in high school, but could not fit in. (Many of you who can remember eating alone in the high school cafeteria know what we're talking about.)

Now with a bit of kissing ass and some money, you can accomplish this pretentious elitism. This is a cop-out. College is a time to grow up, to be independent, not to become what somebody else dictates.

To those of you greeks who do not fall into this category, Mr. Fogle's column should not offend you because it does not refer to you.

On the other hand, those of you in this pathetic situation should take a good look at yourselves and see if this is the way you really want to be.

Congratulations on the good work, Tim Fogle. Keep it up — there's more ass to be kicked out there.

Former trustee Hershey criticizes University in handling investigation

Hershey said that there are certain board members who have been closer to Roselle throughout the investigation than others. He said, however, that, although factions on the board exist, they are not bitter.

"He has friends that are closer to him than other members of the board," Hershey said. "That's to be expected. I wouldn't say that it is the pitting of one side against the other."

Hershey also criticized the University's protection of individuals named in the 18 NCAA allegations of rules violations. He said that he did not feel the administration had made the maximum effort to protect the rights of those involved.

He singled out UK basketball player Eric Manuel as an example. Manuel was not on a list of eligible players sent to the Southeastern Conference before the season because of an allegation concerning his score on the American College Test.

"We refused, or did not certify him to play in the Southeastern Conference, before we gave him a hearing," Hershey said. "That may be a very small technicality, but I think everyone should have a fight to be heard before a decision is made."

Hershey said he did not know if the disgruntlement of board members would result in the firing of UK President David Roselle. But he said he would not be surprised to see Roselle leave the University on his own accord.

Hershey, who served on the Board of Trustees for almost five years, said that Roselle's predecessor, Otis Singletary, would have handled the situation differently.

"I really think so," he said. "I'm very fond of Dr. Singletary. ... He'd let you know."

Najib vows his government will survive Soviet pullout

By SHARON HERBRUGH
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — President Najib told thousands of communist loyalists at a rally yesterday his government will survive after Soviet troops leave and his soldiers will win the nation's 10-year-old civil war.

"God is with us. The people are with us. We will win the war," Najib told about 10,000 members of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, who gathered in freezing temperatures near the presidential palace.

In neighboring Pakistan, Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze extended talks on the civil war amid reports he would meet today with the Moslem guerrillas fighting the Soviet-backed Afghan government.

The guerrillas vow to establish Najib's government and crush Islamic fanaticism.

Najib's rally, broadcast on national television, was staged largely for the dozens of foreign journalists in Afghanistan for the Soviet withdrawal.

"The Russian armies are leaving the country and we will defend ourselves," said the 43-year-old Najib, dressed in combat fatigues. "We have to be strong. We have to unite. They say our people cannot defend our homeland. That is a lie."

As he spoke, more than a dozen giant Soviet transport planes streaked off in different directions, spewing flames designed to deflect heat-seeking

"We have to be strong. We have to unite. They say our people cannot defend our homeland. That is a lie."

missiles fired by the guerrillas, or mujahedeen.

Artillery fire, which officials said was aimed at the rockets, could be heard in the distance.

Before the rally, agents of KHIAD, the Afghan secret police, searched each party member, emptied their Soviet-made rifles and placed the ammunition in a truck.

Najib later led party loyalists, who carried red flags, on a march down the street in front of the palace, not far from the U.S. Embassy.

U.S. officials closed the mission last week because of fears the Afghan army will not be able to defend the capital against the guerrillas once the Soviet army has departed.

The Soviet Union sent troops into Afghanistan in December 1979 to help the Marxist government fight the insurgents.

Under a U.N.-mediated agreement, Moscow is to have all its troops out by Feb. 15.

The Soviets began their pullout in August and resumed it

January, when convoys of tanks, trucks and armored personnel carriers started heading up the Salang Highway toward the Soviet border 200 miles away.

A huge contingent left last week, and Soviet and Afghan officials say there are about 1,000 Soviet soldiers still in Afghanistan and that they could be gone as early as Wednesday.

"The march today is a demonstration of our might, that we are stronger than ever," Najib said. "We are fighting for independence and liberty. Let us unite the people and fight against imperialism, against the enemies of the people. It is time to fight."

Najib singled out Pakistan as an enemy of his nation. Pakistan supports the guerrillas and allows them to operate from bases in the country.

Guerrilla and Pakistani sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a delegation of insurgent leaders was to meet today in Pakistan with Shevardnadze to hear his proposals for ending the Afghan war.

Soviet sources would neither confirm nor deny such a meeting was planned.

The guerrilla leaders began arriving in Islamabad, Pakistan, last night to confer before meeting with Shevardnadze, the guerrilla sources said.

Shevardnadze originally was to depart yesterday afternoon, but Pakistani officials said he extended his stay until this morning.

UK Registrar seeking to resolve problems relating to Add-drop

November was an early Add-drop, but only about 700 students took advantage of it.

"We didn't adequately prepare people for what would be reasonable," Dahl said. "Advanced registration went so smoothly, and everyone thought Add-drop would be the same."

Some students did not like the way the new system was set up.

"I don't like it," said sophomore Kent Overstreet. "It was supposed to be based on GPA before, but this SIS is based on credit hours. And

"Decentralized registration will make it possible for students to advance register in their colleges."

Randall Dahl,
UK registrar

This is the first time I didn't get a course I wanted."

Dahl also said that he hopes to eventually do away with centralized registration. Two colleges will be test sites for this idea next fall.

"Decentralized registration will make it possible for students to advance register in their colleges," he said.

Advance registering in colleges would not only reduce lines, Dahl said, but also would improve the relationship between students and academic advisers.

Eventually, the SIS will be a much better process than the old system, Dahl said.

Former Paraguay president goes into exile; elections in 3 months

By BRUCE HANDLER
Associated Press

ASUNCION, Paraguay — Former President Alfredo Stroessner boarded a jetliner at the airport that bears his name and flew to exile in Brazil, his 34-year-old grip on this nation ended by a military coup that left hundreds dead.

Also yesterday, the new president, Gen. Andres Rodriguez, announced that elections for president and Congress will be held in 90 days.

As Stroessner led about 20 family members and aides up the steps to the jet, onlookers on the observation deck at President Stroessner International Airport jeered, clapped and chanted, "Dictator Get Out!" and "Adios! Adios!"

Stroessner landed in Campinas, 200 miles southwest of Rio de Janeiro on a Paraguay Airlines Boeing 707 then left almost immediately on a Brazilian air force plane, an airport official who asked not to be identified told The Associated Press.

About half an hour later, the plane landed in the small town of Iumbiará in the central Brazilian state of Goiás, an air force official said in Brasília. According to the source, who asked not to be identified, Stroessner was to drive by car, about 100 miles southwest to a farm in Uberaba, located in southeastern Minas Gerais.

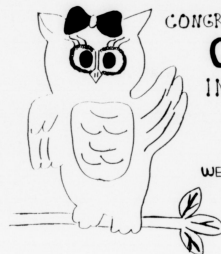

It was not known how long Stroessner intended to stay on a farm in rural Uberaba or why that particular place had been chosen.

"It is up to the Brazilian government to choose the place Stroessner will go at least initially," Paraguayan ambassador Salvador Paredes said in the federal capital of Brasilia.

In an official note released by the foreign ministry yesterday, Brazil announced it had granted political asylum to Latin America's longest-ruling dictator, who was deposed in a bloody coup Friday.
