NCAA says UK's investigation 'inadequate'

By DAN HASSERT
Editor in chief

The NCAA said yesterday that its investigation into the UK basketball program could not confirm any of the widespread corruption described by the Lexington Herald-Leader in its October 1986 articles.

More than two years after the paper's Pulitzer-prize winning articles, the NCAA yesterday officially reprimanded the University for failing to investigate the matter thoroughly and ordered a comprehensive monitoring system of the men's basketball program, including yearly audits on players' finances for the next three years.

The NCAA Infractions Committee was hampered by a lack of cooperation from the Herald-Leader and a lack of concerted effort on the part of the University to find out the truth, it said.

UK President David Roselle said yesterday in a press release that although the University disagreed with part of the NCAA's report, it wouldn't appeal in the interest of leaving the incidents behind.

"We do not fully agree with the findings of the NCAA Infractions Committee, but it is our desire to move forward," Roselle said. "We will therefore not appeal. The report calls for the University to cooperate with the NCAA in some monitoring activities, and we intend to do so."

Roselle could not be reached last night to explain what parts of the report UK did not support.

The articles, which ran in the Oct. 27, 1985, edition of the Herald-Leader, quoted former UK basketball players as saying they'd received cash, tires, clothing, meals and other gifts from UK boosters and friends of the University. Players also described the excessive speaking fees they were paid and how they sold their complimentary players' tickets for $1,000 or more, all of which violate NCAA rules.

"Of the 33 players interviewed by the paper's reporters, 31 said they saw the corruption and 26 said they participated in it."

But the NCAA said it could not find a single violation within the four-year statute of limitations for which it could punish the University, David Berst, director of enforcement for the NCAA, told the Kernel yesterday.

The whole investigation represents "a frustration on the part of all parties over what really happened," Berst said. He stressed that a "lack of cooperation" on the part of the paper prevented the committee from determining whether violations occurred during the period from Oct. 1981 to Oct. 1985. He did say one instance of a $100 handshake was confirmed, but said it had occurred outside that time period.

The NCAA conducted an independent investigation of many people close to the basketball program, including players who transferred from the University and some who were recruited but went elsewhere. Also investigated were many of the sources quoted in the articles, including 17 of the 33 players. But Berst said what the NCAA was told was a lot different than what the Herald-Leader had printed.

"What we were getting from them is a very different response" than what the paper reported, he said.

John S. Carroll, editor of the Herald-Leader, said many sources un-

Fayette best in state for way of life

Fayette County was ranked 21 out of 253 counties in the United States for having a better quality of life, according to a study conducted by the UK College of Business & Economics.

The study was based on six variables broken in three groups: urbanization, climate and environmental conditions, said UK economist Glenn Blomquist, who participated in the study.

Blomquist said the group began their research with an interest in environmental factors and an interest of amenities that are common in a particular region.

The other two individuals who participated in the study were UK economist Mark Berger and John Hoehn, an agricultural economist at Michigan State University.

"We tried to find out what people are willing to pay to live in a nicer area," Hoehn said. "For example, one with a better environment, climate or social atmosphere."

The three researchers took the difference between housing prices and wages, and came up with a premium, Blomquist said.

"The quality of life index can be interpreted as a premium of how many dollars a year people are going to pay," he said.

The quality of life income for Fayette County is 1,055.50. Northern Kentucky county Kenton County, located across from Cincinnati, ranked 192nd with a quality of life income at 24.39. Jefferson County, which includes Louisville, checked in at the No. 200 spot, with its quality of life income at 306.50.

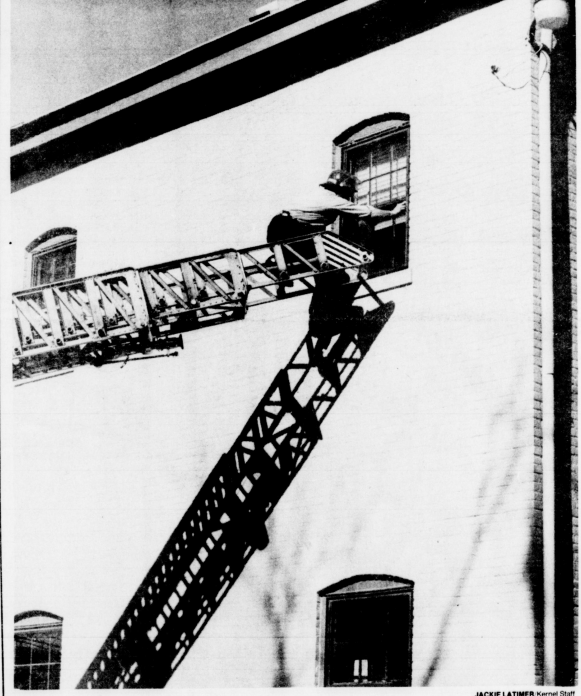

The figures were based on 1980 dollars.

Blomquist said Jefferson County was pulled down because of its environment.

"The quality bundle isn't so good in Jefferson," he said.

No education cash, Governor says again

By JAY BLANTON
Executive Editor

FRANKFORT — Gov. Wallace Wilkinson told the state's university presidents yesterday that although he agrees that universities need more money, he has yet to find any.

"We agreed that we're going to continue to work on the problem," Wilkinson said, "but we don't have the answer yet."

The problem is what the state's eight universities see as a lack of funding provided by Wilkinson's proposed budget.

The executive budget, if enacted by the state legislature, would increase funding for the state's universities by only 0.5 percent in the 1988-89 fiscal year and 5 percent the following year.

This increase will give UK an additional $2.5 million in 1988-89 and $14.2 million in 1989-90. The University, however, needs $11.7 million in 1988-89 and $17.1 million the following year to pay for increases in fixed utility costs, insurance and benefit programs.

After meeting with the university presidents two weeks ago, Wilkinson told the presidents that he would review his proposed budget to see if he could find additional funding. Last week, Wilkinson requested that the presidents submit specific budget needs at their universities, Wilkinson said.

Wilkinson said he realizes that universities need more funding in this biennium, and he agrees that the budget would cause the universities financial difficulties.

"I am in complete and full agreement with our university presidents," the governor said. "At the moment the money is not there."

Thompson said Robertson "has more first-hand knowledge of industry welfare than any other candidate."

Although each representative said their candidate would be the best nominee for president, they all pledged support for the candidate who finally wins the Republican nomination.

"The brass ring is to keep the Republicans at the White House," Rogers said. "We're all in this boat together, and this is just a contest to see who the captain is going to be."

Kevin Hagan, a member of the College Republicans, was more adamant on this matter.

"When we look at the Democrats we're up against, it's an ugly sight," he said. "We're fighting for our way."

"I was disappointed at the turnout, but impressed with the College Republicans," said Paige Foster, an undecided freshman. "The representatives of the candidates were very effective."

ing discussion" with both agreements and disagreements.

Western Kentucky University President Kern Alexander agreed, saying that it is good that to have a "friendly dialogue" with the governor.

UK President David Roselle could not be reached for comment.

Swain said the main thing that was accomplished by the meeting was that the presidents and the governor decided that they would work together to help each other succeed.

The governor and the presidents have agreed to meet regularly throughout the General Assembly session, which ends April 15.

"I think there's a little room for hope there that we might be able to do some things together that would help — especially in the first year," Swain said.

One of those areas where the governor might help is by allowing the universities to keep what revenues they do have.

This year the state's eight universities had to turn over 1 percent of their revenues to the state to combat a $33.7 million revenue shortfall. UK had the largest share of that portion, with $2.7 million.

Wilkinson, however, assured the presidents yesterday that they would have no cuts in the upcoming biennium.

The governor said he knows it has with the governor was "a wide range"

State GOP reps. emphasize united party

By JULIE ESSELMAN

Representatives for the four Republican presidential candidates outlined their reasons for supporting their respective candidates last night, but emphasized the need for a united Republican party next fall.

The four representatives spoke to about 25 people at the Old Student Center Theater at a forum sponsored by UK's chapter of the College Republicans.

John D. Rogers, the Republican Floor Leader in the Kentucky Senate and currently the highest ranking Republican state official, spoke on behalf of U.S. Senator Bob Dole, calling him "the best leader the Republicans can put forth at this time."

Rogers said that Dole is the most "electable" of the four candidates and pointed to polls showing that he is more electable than any of the Democratic contenders.

Monday is the deadline for excellence awards

Staff reports

The deadline for turning in applications for academic excellence scholarships is 5 p.m. Monday.

Applications can be turned in to 7 Administration Building. No late applications will be accepted.

Currently enrolled full-time students on the Lexington campus, including professional and graduate students are eligible for the scholarships.

Students with a minimum cumulative grade point average of 3.5 may pick up a scholarship form in 7 Administration Building.

There were about 425 applicants last year for the scholarships. Barbara Mabry of academic affairs said the office awarded 14 undergraduate scholarships and 17 graduate scholarships.

"It gives students incentive to perform for their academic ability," Mabry said.

"It's Bob Dole who's been on the cutting edge of things going on in the Reagan administration," he said.

But at the same time, Rodgers said Vice President George Bush is "the most beatable" candidate because of his ties to Reagan, such as the federal deficit and the Iran-contra affair.

However, former Kentucky Gov. Louie Nunn said Bush is the best candidate because of his knowledge, stability and electability.

"We need someone who has knowledge of the whole situation," Nunn said. "George Bush's exposure as ambassador, head of the CIA and congressman gives him a better perspective."

Nunn said that "we need someone who is stable, who doesn't lose his temper quickly or flare. I believe Bush is a man of integrity and loyalty. When I analyzed all the (candidates), I had to come down on the side of Bush."

Al Arbogast, who is on the executive committee of the Fayette County Republican Party, was more specific in his reasons for supporting Kemp, outlining certain domestic, foreign and social aspects of Kemp's platform.

He said Kemp "believes we should have a balanced budget" by putting a tight lid on spending and pushing for the line-item veto amendment.

He said Kemp supports "freedom fighters all over the world" and is in favor of early deployment of the Strategic Defense Initiative as a means of protection against nuclear war.

Philip Thompson, former state director of the state Republican Party, spoke on behalf of former television evangelist Pat Robertson.

Thompson said Robertson "has more first-hand knowledge of industry welfare than any other candidate."

Although each representative said their candidate would be the best nominee for president, they all pledged support for the candidate who finally wins the Republican nomination.

"The brass ring is to keep the Republicans at the White House," Rogers said. "We're all in this boat together, and this is just a contest to see who the captain is going to be."

Kevin Hagan, a member of the College Republicans, was more adamant on this matter.

"When we look at the Democrats we're up against, it's an ugly sight," he said. "We're fighting for our way."

Live murder mystery this weekend in park

If you like the board game "Clue," then "Falls Apart II: The Big Twist" might be right up your alley.

This weekendlong 1950s vintage murder mystery will be performed at Cumberland Falls State Resort Park in Corbin, Ky., March 4-6.

Mystery Ink, a Lexington-based group of performing artists, writers, directors and performers this mystery weekend which is a detective buff's dream.

Ann Kilkelly, professor of English at Transylvania University, writes and directs Mystery Ink's productions and also plays the "extraordinary sleuth," Scar Trace.

Kilkelly gets her ideas for the mysteries by visiting the locations where they are to be held, doing character analyses on actors, and reading many different types of literature.

ops the story out of talking with the actors. The actors do not work from a memorized script; they use an outline which allows them to be more flexible, improvising when necessary.

Kilkelly describes "Falls Apart II" as a living "Clue" game. During the mystery weekend, a crime is enacted by the characters of the story, who are pretending to be guests.

It is the job of the participants or guests to discover what crime was committed, as well as who the offender was, by looking at clues and asking questions.

On Sunday, the final day, each team of guests presents its scenario or solution, and the team with the best solution wins a prize.

Jamie Hamon is producer and stage manager for Mystery Ink. Hamon, who is a special programs coordinator at Eastern Kentucky University along with a musician and amateur philologist, said many of the actors are people who have previously been in mysteries.

When writing the stories, Kilkelly begins with the murder and devel-

Antibiotics indispensable in treating diseases

Antimicrobial agents are the second most commonly used drug class in the United States behind drugs used for disorders of the central nervous system. Pharmaceutical manufacturers ship more than $2 billion worth of antibiotics yearly and this accounts for approximately 20 percent of the total cost of all ethical drug products.

Considering mark-up and administrative costs, it is estimated that the total cost of antibiotics exceeds $4 billion per year. Recent studies estimate that 185 million outpatient prescriptions for oral antibiotics are written yearly and account for about 15 percent of all outpatient prescriptions.

DRUG AWARENESS WEEK

Studies examining the use of antibiotics in hospitals show that 20-37 percent of all hospital patients receive antibiotics during their hospital stay and account for 25 percent of total drug acquisition costs.

The empiric application of substances with anti-infective potential has been utilized for thousands of years. Approximately 2,500 years ago, the Chinese concocted poultices of moldy soybean curd to cure festering skin lesions (boils and carbuncles).

The ancient Greek physicians often used substances with known antimicrobial activity, such as wine, myrrh and inorganic salts to treat infected wounds. However, it was not until the 19th century that the microbiology etiology of infection was established and a rational basis for the use of these substances was possible.

In the early 1900s, heavy metals such as arsenic and bismuth were somewhat successful in the management of many infections, including syphilis. The modern era of chemotherapy began with the discovery and clinical use of the sulfonamides in the mid 1930s.

In the 1940s, the therapeutic importance of penicillin and streptomycin was appreciated, and by the 1950s, the "golden age" of antimicrobial chemotherapy was well established.

The "state-of-the-art and science" of antibiotic therapy today is based on the principles of microbiology and the discoveries and technical capabilities of the 1930s and 1940s.

Antimicrobial agents, better known as antibiotics, utilize a principle known as "selective toxicity." Simply stated, the drug is more toxic to the invading micro-organism than it is to the human host. Indeed, our most effective antibiotics (and safest) interfere with the growth and maintenance of the micro-organism's cell wall. Thus, the cell wall, life-sustaining to many disease causing micro-organisms but absent in human cells, becomes a logical target for an antibiotic's selective activity.

The antibiotic which best exemplifies this concept is penicillin and serves as the prototype for many of the available products today. The original penicillin is a completely natural product derived from molds.

Subsequent products are synthetic alterations of the basic penicillin molecule. Other major classes of antibiotics are derived from different molds and fungi by similar processes. There are currently 23 variations of the original penicillin on the United States' market today. Another 24 products not classified as penicillins but attribute their antibacterial activity to a similar mechanism are also available.

Why so many products? The answer is not simple. When penicillin was first introduced, it was remarkably effective against many major pathogens which accounted for acute morbidity and mortality. Streptococcal organisms, responsible for life-threatening pneumonia and rheumatic heart disease, were exquisitely sensitive to penicillin. This drug continues to have a major impact in the treatment and prevention of these diseases. The Neisseria organism, meningococcus, causing a life-threatening infection of the central nervous system still responds to penicillin remarkably well. Another Neisseria, gonorrhea, one of the organisms responsible for sexually transmitted disease, has responded to penicillin for decades, although increasing doses have been necessary for continued effectiveness. Recently, a disturbing increase in absolute penicillin resistance is occurring in this country. Another STD, syphilis, continues to respond to penicillin.

As the applications for penicillin expanded, the awareness of its limitations became apparent. First, the Staphylococcal organisms, implicated in a variety of infectious syndromes, easily developed the ability of resistance to the antibacterial effects of penicillin. Another large and important group of bacteria, responsible for hospital-acquired infections, were not consistently sensitive. Thus, an important reason for the development of new products has focused on these "problem pathogens." Other beneficial, but less important concerns, are the development of compounds which remain in the body longer, thus decreasing the need for frequent dosing, products which are rapidly and completely absorbed allowing for effective oral therapy and agents associated with less adverse effects.

Finally, if we closely examine the "antibiotic industry," we find that there is a strong incentive financially, to develop safe, effective, and clinically useful products. In the penicillin and penicillin-like groups previously discussed, approximately 20 new agents have been released since 1980. These agents are attractive because of their "enhanced activity," and they are relatively safe. None of the other major classes of antibiotics (tetracyclines, macrolides, aminoglycosides, sulfonamides, etc.) have experienced this kind of growth in recent years.

A final work regarding treatment. Antibiotics are compounds that are easily overused. Numerous studies demonstrate this occurrence in many settings. From the viewpoint of a purist, the proper selection of an antibiotic requires the identification of the micro-organism responsible for the infectious process and a determination of the antibiotic's effectiveness. This is not always possible and sometimes numerous organisms must be considered. Thus, the clinical information, what is known about the disease process, and whether changes have occurred which may alter therapeutic approaches. Thus, the treatment of infection should always be done under the supervision of skilled professionals to assure optimal therapy with minimal risk of adverse effects.

The discovery of antibiotics was a quantum leap for science and medicine. They have proven to be indispensable in the treatment of many life-threatening infectious diseases. The development of new antibiotics has expanded their usefulness but has also created new challenges in terms of ever-evolving resistance problems and adverse effects associated with newer agents. We are not likely to see the "panacea" antibiotic, a speculated evolutionary development. We will continue to see new agents developed to meet the "changing faces of infectious disease."

CAWOOD LEDFORD

Cawood Ledford, the Voice of the Kentucky Wildcats for 30 years, called his 1,000th game Saturday against Saracuse.

You might think that after all of that talking, Ledford would have developed some listening habits. But not so. As far as music is concerned, it's more a matter of what he doesn't listen to than what he does.

"I haven't listened to an album in 30 years," was all he had to say on the subject.

Turbulence

After years of setbacks, Turley Richards is tasting success

By ROB SENG
Staff Writer

When your manager is Camille Barbone, the woman that broke Madonna, you have to be a bit optimistic about your own chances for success.

"I guess all I have to do is grow longer hair under my arms," said singer Turley Richards, Barbone's latest client.

Richards, whose singing and songwriting career has spanned almost 20 years, will be performing acoustic sets at Comedy On Broadway for the next seven Monday nights. Richards is accompanied by one of his buddies, Roger Culter, on bass.

Richards' career has been marked by some unusual problems, as well as a share of memorable highlights. He has toured with people as diverse as The Moody Blues, Richard Pryor and even Black Sabbath. In 1970, he performed before the queen of England. He has also written more than 500 songs in his career.

It was in 1969, however, that something happened that would have a lasting effect on his career — he went blind.

"By '71, I wasn't handling it real well and I needed to get away," Richards said. "I was making a lot of money, but I was being led into a direction I didn't want to go. They were trying to make me into another Glen Campbell, another superstar, when all I wanted was to be a star."

Thanks to a sly lawyer who was able to get Richards out of his contracts, he visited a friend in Louisville to go on what he called his sabbatical.

"I left New York to try to understand what I was going through mentally by losing my vision, which I was suppressing because I was so busy," he said.

Richards fell in love with Louisville, but decided he needed to make a living if he was to stay there. He signed a deal with Burger King to do a 13-week show that he also co-produced.

"The Turley Richards Show" ran on Thursday nights during the summer of 1972 and was the No. 2 rated show in its time slot.

"I'm surprised it went over so well because I had long hair and a full beard and it was totally different type of music," he said. Although Burger King offered him a two-year contract, Richards didn't totally come out of his hiatus until 1976 when he signed a contact with Epic/CBS.

"I put out one horrible, poorly produced album, but CBS agreed to let me find my own producer for the next one," Richards said.

That producer turned out to be Jim Messina — Kenny Loggins' old partner. By the time Richards had rounded up a band of Louisville musicians, though, Messina was already busy with three other projects.

So he instead did an album with Mike Post — who later composed the "Hill Street Blues" theme, among others — that also didn't turn out well.

Richards decided to leave Epic/CBS and, with some backing, went to Louisville to form his own production company — TurRich Productions.

"I look on the craziest task possible, which is to produce yourself," said Richards.

He then took his tapes to California where he played them for Gabriel Arras, an old friend who in turn played them for Mick Fleetwood.

Fleetwood was so impressed that he decided to manage Richards for a year.

New director Ramsey to lead Chorale Sunday

Staff reports

The UK Chorale will perform a concert in the Center Sunday Series under the leadership of their new director, William Ramsey.

Ramsey replaces Sarah Holroyd, who retired from her position last year after leading the Chorale for 15 years.

Ramsey, a new faculty member at UK, was previously a professor of music and director of choral activities at Stanford University for 12 years. He has recorded and performed with Leonard Bernstein, Robert Shaw, Robert Wagner and the Minnesota and San Jose symphonies.

Ramsey made his debut at Carnegie Hall as a baritone, and also served as associate conductor of the Cantata Singers in New York City.

WHEN, WHERE AND HOW MUCH
The UK Chorale will be in concert at 3 p.m. Sunday in the Recital Hall of the Singletary Center for the Arts. Admission is free.

Sunday's show will consist of works by Schumann, Haydn, Beethoven and Mendelssohn.

The Chorale is composed of 24 UK chamber music students who are considered to be among the finest voice students at UK.

"I find the students enormously talented, enthusiastic and bright," Ramsey recently told the Community. "With that combination they can do anything they want."

They also present the Shaker

BILL RAMSEY

Worship Service, a traditional Shaker music service held in Shakerstown yearly. They also perform the annual Madrigal Dinners, which are dinners held around the Christmas holidays, including the chorale singing madrigals.

MIMI GOESE

Hugo Largo lifting spirits

By ERIK REECE
Arts Editor

The last time a journalist merged an electric violin with performance art, the result was the pioneering sights and sounds of Laurie Anderson. Well, journalist/hardcore punk bassist Tim Sommer formed Hugo Largo in '84 and once again an anti-rock act has pushed through to the avant-garde.

Hugo Largo, who will play Babylon Babylon tonight, is made up of two bass guitarists, an electric violin and the limp voice of Mimi Goese — by far the band's best instrument. Goese is a product of New York's downtown performance art scene. One reviewer described her as having "the range of a cruise missile."

She does.

Humor is also said to have a sense of humor that takes the mental edge off Hugo Largo's otherwise cerebral brand of music. At an L.A. show, Goese stripped down to a Bon Jovi T-shirt and sang the band's parodic cover of "Wanted Dead Or Alive."

At another gig, the song went over too well, according to Sommer, and Goese shouted at the audience, "I hate you all! We've been playing all these other songs and the Bon Jovi one is your favorite!"

Hugo Largo has charmed the rock presses from L.A. to London. The New York Times' Jon Pareles lauded the music as "lullabies for postmoderns." Their songs often have been compared to Lou Reed's "Street Hassle." But the violin on their latest album, ironically titled Drum, is more of a slow-draw than the short, punchy cello of "Street Hassle."

The Hugo Largo view of New York is also quite separate from Reed's.

The lyrics and music of Drum float up into the cerebral realm, rather than crawl in the dirt and grime of Reed's New York City naturalism. Most of Drum was produced by R.E.M.'s Michael Stipe, a lover of the eccentric. The album consists of six songs. They aren't spread out over two sides, but rather are duplicated on sides A and B. It took me two days to realize this. That may give you an idea of how mesmerizing and sublime Hugo Largo's music is.

WHEN, WHERE AND HOW MUCH
Hugo Largo will be in concert tonight at Babylon Babylon. Cover is $3.

"It was good on the surface, because the power of his name helped me out a lot, but he had no concept of managing," said Richards. "I put his name on my album as executive producer because I knew it would get a lot more play on the radio."

In that same year, 1980, Richards had a sizeable hit with "You Might Need Somebody."

"I should've done one more album to get my feet in proper perspective, but I took that album and tried to springboard myself into my own production career," he said.

In 1983, Richards suffered another career setback when he temporarily lost his voice when he developed a polyp on his vocal chords. Although it was operated on last year, Richards will have it operated on again this year because the problem has been resurfacing.

Richards is currently working on Your Eyes, which may have three or four cuts produced by either Phil Collins or Mark Knopfler. Richards said Barbone told him that he needs the extra push that Bruce Hornsby had last year when Huey Lewis produced a few cuts on Hornsby's album.

"It's too expensive to get guys like that for a whole album, so you get them to do three or four cuts instead," Richards said.

Richards is trying to assemble an all-star cast of people such as James Taylor, Stevie Nicks and Ray Charles to sing on the album. (Richards once opened for Charles, and backstage cracked that he'd like to see someone take a picture of him and Charles trying to shake hands.)

"We're trying to load up the album with these names so that some programmer will look at the album and go, 'My God, who's this guy Turley?'" said Richards.

Richards is also working on an autobiography and Barbone already has two publishers lined up.

"We'll also try to hit the talk shows in order to show me — who has a very positive outlook on life, even though I'm blind and I hope it'll be inspirational," he said.

Ky. court recognizes the media in civil cases

By MARK R. CHELLGREN
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — The Kentucky Supreme Court yesterday ruled that news organizations and the public have a limited right of access to documents in civil cases.

The opinion was hailed by an attorney in the case as a major victory for news organizations because it also recognized the time constraints on gathering information for publication or broadcast.

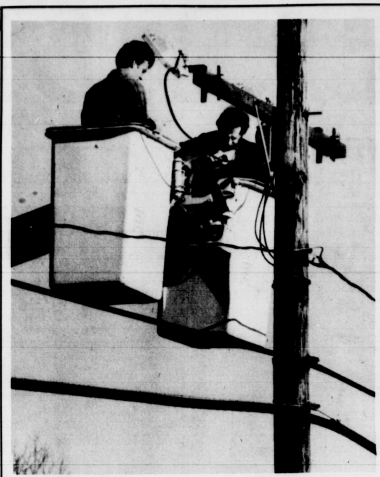

"This is going to be an extremely helpful decision," said Jon Fleischer, the attorney for The Courier-Journal newspaper in Louisville.

The case started when a reporter for the newspaper sought access to records of the settlement of a lawsuit filed against Jefferson County by a former county police officer.

Jefferson Circuit Judge Olga Peers refused the request on the grounds that the file contained information about an individual's "mental status."

An attorney for the newspaper went to the judge's chambers to ask for a hearing but was denied.

•Mystery this weekend

Mason Smith, information news editor at the division of public information at EKVU, is one of the actors. This will be the second mystery weekend for Smith, who also acted in "The Arlington House Affair" in Richmond, Ky., last year.

"The participants really get into it, they are very literate people who will catch the slightest references," Smith said.

Most of the guests are mystery buffs. Some of the participants include attorneys, professors, newspaper editors and clergymen.

"When the actors arrive at the mystery, we have to show up in character as soon as we hit the door, because the guests watch us from the moment we arrive," Smith said. "There is always the danger that you will slip out of character. You must stay in character for the whole weekend."

The guests get so involved in the mystery that they sometimes go overboard, Smith said. They have been known on occasion to go so far as to follow the actors into bathrooms or back to their cabins.

"People love it; they get so involved that we (the actors) have to watch out for one another," Smith said.

The cost of the mystery weekend is $130 per person, which provides lodging, reception and dinner. The deadline for the next mystery weekend was last February.

•Fayette ranked high

Water pollution, toxic sites and teacher/student ratios are the factors that gave Fayette County a better rank than Jefferson, Bloomquist said.

One method of doing the ranking was based on the "values of others instead of our own thinking," he said.

About three years of research was dedicated to the project, Blomquist said.

"The first thing was to try to bring data together," Heo said. "That took up a good part of the time."

He said data for the census was compiled from a bureau of census, an environmental handbook, a climatic booklet and FBI crime reports.

"We used the approach of looking at peoples values instead of looking at listings," Blomquist said.

Senate passes anti-incinerator bill

By CHARLES WOLFE
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — A bill aimed at thwarting the Army's plan to burn old nerve-gas rockets at its depot near Richmond was passed by the Kentucky Senate yesterday.

House Bill 638 would let the Army know the General Assembly "doesn't want Madison County to be treated as guinea pigs," said Sen. Bill Clouse, D-Richmond.

The Army has proposed to destroy the obsolete chemical weapons in an incinerator it would build at the Bluegrass Army Depot in Madison County and seven other sites around the country.

The bill would declare nerve gas a hazardous waste to allow it to be regulated by the Natural Resources Cabinet. It also would require the incinerator to be of a technology "fully proven" to assure 99.9999 percent destruction of the chemicals — a standard foes of the Army plan consider unlikely to be met.

The Senate vote was 35-1, with Sen. Joe Lane Travis, R-Glasgow, the lone dissenter.

Travis said the Army would be forced to move the aging rockets to another site for destruction, endangering more people than would on-site incineration. He also said he doubted the state had jurisdiction over Army property.

The Senate also passed Senate Bill 231, to require demonstration of voting machines in high schools, or on student visits to the county clerk's office. The vote was 34-1.

It's "disgusting" how little young people know about the voting process, said Sen. Nelson Allen, the bill's sponsor.

"Young people between 18 and 25 have the worst voting record among our electorate," said Allen, D-Greene.

Unanimously and without debate, the Senate gave final passage to HB398, which would delete from Kentucky law a requirement of "earnest resistance" by a victim of a sex crime. It would change the definition of "forcible compulsion" by an assailant to include an express or implied "threat of physical force."

The House passed a bill that would allow the governor to set salaries for heads of independent state agencies, HB692, which passed 59-24, also would prohibit those salaries from being higher than the governor's.

Rep. Greg Stumbo, sponsor of the bill, said it would affect directors of the state Council on Higher Education, the Kentucky Employees' Retirement System and the Kentucky Teachers' Retirement System, among others. Those agencies currently set the salaries for their own officers, said Stumbo, D-Frestonsburg.

Presidents meet with Wilkinson been difficult for presidents to plan in the past because universities have allocated money and then had it taken back by the state.

Wilkinson said he doubts that the state will have a revenue shortfall in the upcoming biennium.

But if the state does experience a shortfall, the governor said the universities "will not be asked to contribute to those shortfalls."

As for now, the governor said the search for additional funding will continue, although he is not optimistic about finding more funds for the universities.

"We're continuing to search for dollars that might be there for commonwealth and institutions of higher learning may be better served than where those dollars are now," the governor said. "We haven't found it, but we're not going to stop looking."

UK gets reprimanded by NCAA

derwent intense pressure after the articles ran.

"When we published those articles, some those players came under great pressure from boosters and friends to change their stories," he said. "But that doesn't alter the truth."

Carroll denied any responsibility on the paper's part to hand over any of the more than 100 tapes of interviews.

"We have never turned over notes or tapes to any agency, including the police, the FBI and the NCAA," Carroll said. "Our policy is that we don't give out anything to the NCAA or any other agency."

"We don't have any responsibility to see that justice is done. We only have a responsibility to tell the truth."

In UK athletic circles, the reaction was relief that the investigation had finally ended.

"We've been keeping my fingers crossed and holding my breath for over two years that the investigation would find nothing wrong with the Kentucky basketball program," said UK coach Eddie Sutton.

"I'm happy that it's over. It's like the big dark cloud has been removed."

Former UK basketball player Jim Master, who was quoted in the 1985 article, said he was happy with the news but hadn't expected anything harsher.

"I'm elated at the news and happy for the program," Master said. Now the players can "put all those things behind them."

"I guess I knew all along that they (NCAA) had been having trouble," he said. "I knew the NCAA was having difficulty tracking it down."

UK must submit periodic written reports on the men's basketball program, including economic audit of the student-athletes' employment earnings, expenses for speaking engagements and the use of complimentary tickets.

NCAA rules prohibit student-athletes from getting paid for employment while on scholarship, getting paid beyond expenses for speaking engagements and from selling their season passes.

Rosselle said in his statement yesterday that UK had already set up a monitoring process. Former UK President Otis Singletary had ordered the University to conduct its own investigation after he had been interviewed by the paper.

But Berts said the NCAA did not believe that the University had worked hard enough when it told the NCAA that it could not substantiate any of the violations.

"Basically the committee thought the University should have gone further ... in its efforts to interview the people (in the article)," he said.

At least several changes in UK Athletics policy came about after the articles. New UK coach Sutton barred boosters from the locker-room when he arrived before the '85 season.

"But Carroll said it was difficult to determine the effect of the articles.

"It either cured the problem or drove it underground," he said.

"I think that some people will never believe that UK broke the rules, but I think that (most) of the people who kept the program from the inside knew that the rules were being violated even as the articles were being published."

Rex Chapman cuts down a net after UK clinched a share of its 37th Southeastern Conference title Wednesday night.

A hostile Rebel den awaits UK

By TOM SPALDING
Staff Writer

If UK is to win its 37th Southeastern Conference basketball title outright, it must beat the Ole Miss Rebels tonight at the Tad Smith Coliseum in Oxford, Miss.

Kentucky, 21-5 overall and 12-5 in the SEC, assured itself of at least a share of the league title after beating Georgia, 80-72, Wednesday night at Rupp Arena.

Mississippi, 12-14 overall and 6-11 in the conference, assured itself of playing in the SEC tournament's first round by being one of the four bottom teams in the league after losing at Auburn Wednesday, 92-76.

Add to the scenario that the Wildcats have won three straight and have their leading scorer — Rex Chapman — back in the lineup and it would seem to equal a Kentucky victory. However, the players and coaches know there is no such thing as a guaranteed victory in Oxford.

"It's always been hard to win down there," said UK guard Ed Davender. "It's definitely one of the toughest places to play."

Davender's not the only one with that belief. Auburn coach Sonny Smith ranked Ole Miss' gym as the toughest place to play in the SEC, and with good reason.

"They've had a lot of problems on the road but at home they're 6-2," UK coach Eddie Sutton said. "They are tough in Oxford. We know we're going into a battlefield that's going to be an all-out war."

The Rebels haven't filled the 9,000-seat arena this season. They will when Kentucky comes to town.

"We've been sold out for weeks,"

Ole Miss coach Ed Murphy said. "The gym is a smaller place and the noise can be effective. We get up and play great at home and squeeze out a few wins."

But Ole Miss has squeezed out more than just a few wins on their home court. The Rebels have upset both Auburn (68-66) and Florida (82-75). And nothing would make Mississippi fans more happy than to pin a loss on the Wildcats.

"We've got a chance against them but we're going to have to play super," Murphy said.

Ole Miss played spoiler against the Gators on Feb. 17 by knocking Florida out of first place in the league. Florida (10-6 in the SEC) hasn't been on top in the league since that time.

But if Ole Miss can beat Kentucky and Florida can knock off both Alabama and LSU, the Gators will tie UK for first.

"I told the squad if you want to win the championship you're going to have to tighten up your belt," Sutton said. "I believe they've gotten selfish. They don't want to share (the title) with Florida."

Mississippi has been led by its red-hot All-SEC candidate Rod

Barnes. The 6-foot-1 senior guard is averaging 18 points a game, including 40 in his last two.

"They have one of the best players and one that I admire and respect as much as anyone in the SEC in Barnes," Sutton said.

Great enough, added Murphy, to be ranked among the SEC elite.

"Rod Barnes is the best guard in the conference, no question," he said. "He's had a better year than any guard in the SEC this year."

Freshman Tim Jumper is another Rebel guard that Murphy admires, especially for his 13.6 scoring average.

"Tim Jumper is going to be one of the best guards in this league," Murphy said.

But UK's guards are no slouches themselves. Chapman has led the Wildcats with 17.7 points per game and Davender's right behind him with 16.1. They're also the two reasons why UK is playing what Sutton said was its best of the season.

"I think we're a better team now than when we were No. 1," he said.

"There's still room for improvement but I like the team better than I did a few weeks ago."

Wildcats host Florida in Shively home opener

Staff reports

It's take me out to the ballgame time again at Shively Field.

The UK baseball team will begin Southeastern Conference play this weekend by hosting the University of Florida for three games.

The Cats and Gators will square off for a double-header at Shively at noon tomorrow. The series will end Sunday with a final game beginning at 1:30 p.m.

Kentucky is ranked No. 23 in the nation and began its season last weekend by taking three out of the four games played in Florida.

"I thought our road trip was very successful," UK coach Keith Madison said. "We won three out of four against teams that were ahead of us in games played."

"Our offense hit the ball extremely well for so early in the season. I was pleased with our pitchers. They were pleased with hitters who already had seen some game action."

Florida (10-4) is led by the double-play combination of All-SEC shortstop and second baseman Tommy Edwards. The Gators return 10 lettermen from last year's 32-24 team.

"I think Florida was the most underrated team last year in the SEC besides us," Madison said. "I feel they are one of the most improved teams from last year in the SEC."

Lady Kats get last shot at SEC

Staff reports

The Lady Kats get another life tonight or a least a chance to finally defeat a Southeastern Conference opponent. The Lady Kats will take on Vanderbilt at 9 tonight in the first round of the SEC Tournament at the James H. Gray Civic Center in Albany, Ga.

UK, 19-14 overall, lost all nine of its league games this season by an average of nearly 15 points. The Lady Kats fell to Vandy (18-9) earlier this season 83-68.

But the Lady Kats will have the services of their leading scorer BeBe Croley. The senior forward has missed six games this season with a knee injury and a sprained ankle. UK is 12-9 with Croley in the lineup and 1-5 without her.

Rifle team guns down SEC

The UK rifle team captured the SEC championship last week at Vanderbilt by a margin of 533 points.

Kentucky was led by Tom Mullaney with 1,101 points, Ted Carr with 1,093, Kris Gerig with 1,080 and Pam Champlin with 1,088. The Wildcat shooters captured the first five places in the individual competition. Mullaney, Carr, Gerig and Champlin made the All-SEC team. Allen Stallins made the second team.

Runners heading to Florida

Several UK runners will compete in the Florida Fast Times Invitational in Gainesville, Fla., Sunday in an attempt to qualify for the NCAA indoor track championships.

Probable participants Sunday include Bob Wheelan, Russell Nally, Brian Maslany, Joey Taylor, Elisa Frosini-Brannan and Denise Bush-allow.

Gymnasts tumble to LSU

The UK woman's gymnastics team heads south to LSU for a tri-meet with the Lady Tigers and Penn St.

UK is 4-5 on the season and ranked No. 3 in the Southeast region. LSU is ranked No. 10 in the nation and Penn St. is ranked No. 18.
