The report, which was released in Lexington by Dr. W. D. Funkhouser, secretary-treasurer of the conference, said that Tennessee itself has been asked by the executive committee to take proper responsibility in the institution for violation of loop rules and to take proper action to see that the proper action taken by the school is found to be satisfactory to the conference.

According to section three of the new absence ruling adopted by the university October 13, "absences shall be counted beginning with the first day at the time other students die."

Selection Is First Official Act of Association of Sports Heads

CONTRIBUTORS SUBMIT FIRST, SECOND CHOICE Kelly, Spicer, Williams, Others Given Honorable Mention

By VERNON D. ROOKS Sports Editor, The Kernel The All-Southern conference football team written above is not presented with the idea that it will please anyone at all. They never do. It represents the consensus of opinion of eleven sports editors of Southern conference college newspapers and has been accepted by them as the "official" all-Southern team of 1930.

Each sports editor was asked to give his first and second team selections on basis of actual observation, acquaintance and information from the press editors. Two votes were counted for a first team selection, and one vote for a second team selection. Sports editors submitting selections included K. C. Ramsay, of the University of North Carolina; Jim Green, of Duke University; E. H. Levy, of the University of Virginia; Elmer G. Salter, of Alabama Polytechnic Institute (Auburn); Jimmy Young, of Mississippi A. & M. College; Tom Siler, of the University of Tennessee; H. G. Spencer, of Georgia State University; James H. Gillis, of Tulane University; Henry Rippelmeier, of Clemson College; Albert G. Smith, of the University of Georgia; and the sports editor of the University of Kentucky.

68 Players Mentioned

Sixty-eight players received votes in the poll—enough to form six full teams. Ninety-two of the 23 schools in the conference had players mentioned in the voting which covered 100 schools in the South. Seventeen schools were represented on the first team selection. Georgia had the most with three. Alabama, Tulane and Tennessee had two each, and Kentucky, Florida and Georgia Tech had one each. Twelve men were included because these guards received the same number of votes.

John Henry Suther, Alabama half-back, received 22 votes, more than any other player, getting 22 out of a possible 22. Singleton, Alabama tackle, and Traver (Tennessee) were almost as popular with 21 votes each, with Bobby Dodd, Tennessee quarterback, receiving 20 votes.

Table listing player names and vote counts for the All-Southern football team selection.

INTERPRETING THE NEW ABSENCE RULES

Following the shock of the actual passing of the new absence rules (removal of points) shock the student body. These tremors, like the first throbs of a mighty earthquake, have been increasing in volume until the foundations of student respect for authority and the rules which make their Alma Mater are being twisted and distorted. An earthquake of criticism is upon the university. So far the first throbs of outraged privileges have done no serious harm; like the earthquake they toss a while then rest to gather more force until that which displeases them is destroyed.

Absence rules, tardy excuses, notes from mama, what old familiar sights do they invoke? Grammar school days, which once past we never expected to remember. At least twelve years of consistent training to be dependable, in part at last, are wasted when college is reached and the student finds such rules in force as he was subjected to in grammar school. There would be some condonation if the rules were old and traditional, sentimentally kept as reminders of the day in which they were made, but they are new.

October the thirteenth was the unlucky day for the student body. On this day ten sections of rules were passed. These ten sections constitute direct ruling on absences.

According to the consensus of student opinion, these rules are of an unfair and discriminating nature. The interpretation which has been made of these rules seems to us the only logical interpretation possible of such rules.

According to the new rules a student may be allowed to make up work if he presents a reasonable excuse to his professor; or, if his absences happen to come on the day immediately preceding or immediately following a holiday he must either be penalized three credits or present a reasonable excuse. What constitutes a reasonable excuse? Any excuse which can be given must be satisfied with the personal element, for no longer are the excuses of parents or physician of any use to the student who misses a class. It is just his hard luck. It stands to reason that if these excuses cannot be presented to the head of the residence, some incident of courtesy should be made to the student. For instance, if a student presents a class two minutes late, he may not go to the instructor's office until ten minutes after the class has begun. This is not only a courtesy but a necessity. When a person is confronted with the necessity of proving his whereabouts at a given time during a specific hour with a period of over ten days has elapsed he is thereby irresponsible for any excuse which may be presented. It is humanly impossible for any person to remember the exact and specific cause for an absence occurring over ten days past. Furthermore any presented to the instructor must be presented according to the rules of what is an acceptable excuse. There is no set standard by which the student's rights may be protected.

The matter of what constitutes an excuse is also a matter resting entirely upon the judgment of the professor. It cannot be questioned that there will be a great variety in the standard set by instructors of what is an excuse. Every instructor is bound to have a definite idea of what seems to him to be excessive cuts. The student is not protected.

It is little wonder that the grumblings of discontent are shaking the student body; it is little wonder that they have been merely tremors gathering force for even the students cannot understand the rules which they are being subjected to. There is an interpretation of the absence rules by the students which has not pointed out the many defective points of them. It is not that the students object to rules being made for governing their conduct. It is the fact that they resent that the rules which were made to govern them are of such an ambiguous nature that they cannot understand them.

ALL-SOUTHERN NAMED

In other columns of today's paper appears an All-Southern football eleven selected exclusively by members of the Association of Southern Conference College Sports Editors. The mythical team was selected by sports editors of eleven college newspapers of the conference, and, The Kernel believes, is as representative of gridiron talent as any other All-Southern team nominated this year.

The association is a new organization in the South and was sponsored by The Kernel and organized by Vernon D. Rooks, Sports Editor of The Kernel. Its purpose is the promotion of conference athletics to an elevated plane of fine sportsmanship and regard for the rules of the game. The association was scheduled to hold its first official meeting Saturday, December 13, at Chapel Hill, North Carolina, in connection with a meeting of executive officials of the Southern Conference. This initial meeting has been postponed, due to quarterly examinations at several of the schools, but will be held at an early date.

The Kernel feels that the new organization is one that will go further than promotion of athletics in the Southern Conference. It is the type of association that will bind the various schools of the conference into a closer brotherhood in the field of higher education in the South.

WHILE IN KNOXVILLE

Only the spectators of the Kentucky-Tennessee game witnessed the Wildcat Band's best performance of the year on the Tennessee field, but the whole city heard the Big Blue Band as it marched through the streets of Knoxville. Only Knoxville heard that stirring marching music but the whole south listened in while the best band in Dixie broadcast over the local radio station there.

The members of the band are to be commended for the supreme showing that was made on the rival's territory. They deserve cheers from the students of the university for the inspiration furnished to players and cheerers at the game. They merit the appreciation of Lexington for the spirit and loyalty displayed when, in marching through the streets of Knoxville after the game, they demonstrated blue grass sportsmanship to Tennessee people. They are worthy of the affection and pride of all Kentucky for the brilliant broadcast which was sent into the homes of the south, awakening many people to the prominence of Kentucky performance of the state university. The best band in Dixie has maintained that position and remains one of the university's most invaluable institutions.

CHARITY GAME

If Kentucky is to be successful in retaining its position as a successful university, it is necessary that the university maintain a team and that of another prominent school, a great service will be rendered not only to the needy in Lexington and Kentucky, but, indirectly to the university as well. There is nothing quite so important to the welfare of a state supported institution as the goodwill of the citizenship of that commonwealth. Unfortunately, the very nature of the work of the university makes such contributions as the proposed charity game practically impossible save at extreme rare intervals. Accordingly, there are still those persons over the state who at times have an unfriendly attitude toward their state university, or who, if not actively antagonistic to the college, are always prone to cast their financial support to channels which they term more worthy and needy.

Here, then, is an opportunity—one which should appeal alike to the faculty, student body and to the citizens of Lexington. Dean Wain is to be praised for his foresight in sponsoring this matter, which besides its worth as a means of relief to the destitute of the community, is an expression of the fact that the University of Kentucky, with its entire personnel, is vitally concerned with the economic and social problems of the commonwealth. It is to be hoped that arrangements for his foresight in sponsoring this matter, which besides its worth as a means of relief to the destitute of the community, is an expression of the fact that the University of Kentucky, with its entire personnel, is vitally concerned with the economic and social problems of the commonwealth. It is to be hoped that arrangements for his foresight in sponsoring this matter, which besides its worth as a means of relief to the destitute of the community, is an expression of the fact that the University of Kentucky, with its entire personnel, is vitally concerned with the economic and social problems of the commonwealth.

NOT IN THE CONTRACT

When students that are to college it is not in the contract that they are to be put in the hands of the faculty like guinea pigs at a hospital, to be used for experimental purposes. A state educational institution is no Louis the Fourteenth. The time has come to think more of the personal rights and liberty of the students than of the tender feelings of the professors which should be injured when they overstep the provisions of the contract outlined by the university.

"Pedagogical liberty may call for a wide latitude in thought and instruction, but cannot justify violating ordinary rules and obligations in promoting its material." Today it has apparently limited its latitude to thought and destruction. Students are losing their individuality, they are subject to such a thorough investigation during their college careers that all individuality possessed by them is shattered by the startling frankness of the investigator. They are primarily not to colleges to receive an education and yet today they are merely the food which feeds the minds of their professors. They are the subject matter for the assimilation of the progressive minds of the nation. We wonder if out of this group any progressive minds can develop when they are given no basis, no encouragement for original and independent thought during their educational careers.

Liberty is an unknown quality to most students; their life is lived for them by those who are experimenting on new plans. Thought, their thought, is all planned for them. The pupils of the successful instructor follow his outlined thought most closely. It is like turning an animal loose to find food when the food has been dragged down a path straight in front of him, and when he cannot miss the scent. Freedom, even recreation is subjected to scientific limitations and experiments, and has become an illusion to the average student. Responsibility is merely a word that is used in theory and not in practice.

It is clear that college students all over the United States are rebelling against the prevailing systems. They are tired of living the life of the guinea pig. The same urge which Patrick Henry felt when he said, "give me liberty or give me death," is rising in them.

THE U. K. JUDGING TEAM

The university is justly proud of the record of its representatives at the annual stock show recently held in Chicago. Numerous first prizes and an equally large number of second and third place awards enabled the Kentucky judging team to emerge with third place honors among representatives from colleges and universities from all parts of the country. Much favorable comment, both oral and from the press, has been made concerning the team and the university wins training enabled these men to so successfully compete in this nationwide event.

Free Trade League Offers Three Prizes For Student Papers

Three prizes, $100, $50, and $25 respectively are offered by the Free Trade League, in a competition open to any college student majoring in economics for a fair, non-partisan discussion of the new tariff, with regard to the interest as consumers of our 125,000,000 Americans. The paper must be written in view of the relations of farmers, wage-earners and salaried workers as both producers and consumers in face of the reduced purchasing power of the dollar, and with reference to the industries claiming permanent benefit from the protective tariff.

The papers will be judged by three members of the American Economic Association, and those proposing to compete are requested to send their names in promptly and to submit their papers before December 15, 1930, to the Free Trade League, Room 908, 2 West 45th Street, New York.

The League reserves the right of publication of the winning papers but will give special permission to the authors, newspapers and others desiring to republish. There are no rules or regulations, but compactness of statement will be counted a merit.

An interesting feature of this issue of the Kentucky Kernel is the ad of Montgomery Ward & Co. announcing their Big Sale of Dresses at drastic price reductions. See their ad on the last page.—Adv.

The Rifle teams will open the season January 17, by competing with the New York Stock Exchange and the University of Delaware. The varsity captain has not yet been chosen.

Lieut. Criswell in charge, has not yet designated the respective teams. Those eligible for the varsity are: L. S. Payton, C. D. Wallace, A. P. Stallard, E. H. Robertson, F. Munselman, T. C. Fuller, S. Barney, M. Wachs, F. M. Settle, J. E. Ramon, K. D. Little, W. C. Florence, R. Allison, M. L. Walton, C. F. Stone, J. Powers, J. W. Rogers, P. H. Johnston, C. M. Christie, A. Henderson, T. Mantz, and O. B. Coffman.

The teams made an excellent showing last year, due partly to the coaching of Sergeant Bryant. Lieutenant Criswell, a new member of the Military staff this year, has been selected as the new coach and expects to produce another winning team.
