UK law student is killed in spring break accident

By TOM SPALDING
Executive Editor

A 23-year-old UK law student died last week after sustaining critical head injuries in a motorcycle accident in Key West, Fla., authorities there confirmed last night.

Jason William Miner of Madisonville, Ky., died Wednesday of a subdural hematoma, almost two days after he was thrown off the seat of a Honda motorcycle being driven by a friend.

Police said the driver, 20-year-old Mary Beth Hambrick of Louisville, Ky., also a UK student, lost control of the vehicle at 3:44 a.m. Monday while traveling east at 30 miles an hour on North Roosevelt Boulevard.

Hambrick apparently turned to ask Miner a question when she struck a four-inch curb, throwing both off the bike, according to Kathy Woodman, public information officer for the Key West Police Department. Hambrick sustained only minor injuries, Woodman said.

Police suspect the accident was alcohol-related, although the results of both students' blood alcohol content won't be known for four to six weeks, Woodman said.

"We are going on the assumption that this was an alcohol-related death," Woodman said. "It's an assumption, not a fact."

Woodman said Hambrick could be charged with driving-under-the-influence manslaughter if she tests above a .10 percent blood alcohol level.

"If Mary Beth had been drinking and had met criteria for what is legally drunk, she will be charged before a grand jury," Woodman said.

Hambrick could not be reached for comment.

Miner, a first-year law student and a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity, was in Key West for spring break, according to fraternity brother Mike Bowling.

"Jason was well-liked throughout the fraternity house," Bowling said. "He was the kind of guy that everyone respected."

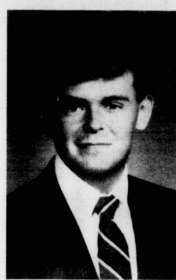

A memorial service is scheduled for 6 p.m. Thursday at UK's Catholic Newman Center, Bowling said.

Miner was a 1984 graduate of Madisonville North Hopkins High School, Bowling said. He received degrees in economics and political science from UK last spring.

"He's always been an extremely bright student," Bowling said. "He did pretty well."

Woodman said Miner's death was only the second traffic-related fatality in Key West this year. The other was a woman who also sustained head injuries in a crash.

"There are so many inexperi-

enced operators and the streets (in Key West) are so narrow," Woodman said. "... it's amazing there aren't more accidents."

Woodman said Miner, who was unconscious at the scene, was taken by the Atlantic Key West rescue unit to Poop Hospital in Key West and was airlifted to Mount Sinai Hospital in Miami a short time later.

University trustee Nicholas Pisacano dies at his home

By DAVID A. HALL
Staff Writer

UK trustee Nicholas J. Pisacano died March 11 at his home after an apparent heart attack. He was 65.

Pisacano, who was appointed to the UK Board of Trustees in 1987 by then-Gov. Martha Layne Collins, also was a Lexington physician, a former University professor and administrator.

He had taught an introduction to biology course at UK since 1962, and for the last 11 years had taught without pay. Pisacano received the Most Popular Professor Award in 1965 and the Distinguished Teaching Award in 1967.

"The entire University community has lost one of its best friends," said interim UK President Charles Wethington. "Nick Pisacano was an excellent faculty member, a dedicated physician and a fine Board of Trustees member. He cared deeply about the University of Kentucky. We will all miss this talented and devoted supporter."

Pisacano held many leadership positions at UK.

He served as chairman of the UK Hospital board, was a member of the UK Athletics Association Board of Directors, assistant dean in the College of Arts & Sciences, director of continuing medical education of the College of Medicine, professor and chairman of the Department of Allied Health Education and Research, assistant to the vice president of the medical school and chairman of the Department of Hygiene and Public Health.

Pisacano practiced family medicine and was the executive director of the American Board of Family Practice, a Lexington-based organization that certifies family physi-

3 colleges to hold advance registration in Alumni Gymnasium

By ROBYN WALTERS
Staff Writer

Students in three colleges will advance register in Alumni Gymnasium this spring, according to the Registrar's Office.

Students in the colleges of Arts & Sciences, Business & Economics and Communications, and the Graduate School will register for summer and fall classes in 14 Alumni Gymnasium. Advance registration will be held March 27 through April 12.

The move was made to free up 230 Student Center and make advance registration more efficient, according to University officials.

230 Student Center was used last semester to register students in the Graduate School and the College of Arts & Sciences, but Student Center Director Frank Harris said he received several complaints about the room being used.

"Room 230 is the only meeting room of that size in the Student Center and with registration pulling it out that much of the year, it was displacing many student organizations and groups," Harris said.

"It is a kind of operation that cannot be broken down and taken apart at night. No one else can use it during that time," said Lisa Collins of the Registrar's Office.

Alumni Gym was chosen as the next site for registration because of its size, said University Registrar Randall Dahl.

"Alumni Gym was the only space available on campus in which we would be able to conduct advance registration," Dahl said. "I wouldn't say it is ideal, but it is workable."

Last semester the Registrar's Office had students register in their individual colleges, but Dahl said that it was not very efficient.

"Evaluations with the colleges showed they did not have the ability to serve students without using a much larger number of personnel," he said.

"It was a terrific drain on people, building, and resources," Collins said.

Students in the other 12 Lexington Campus colleges will register in their own colleges this semester, Dahl said.

Collins said she expects about 9,500 students to register at Alumni Gym this semester.

Dahl said that students can help the process at Alumni Gym run smoothly if they follow the guidelines printed in the schedule of classes:

- Meet with academic advisers.
- Know which classes they want.
- Have alternative classes and sections chosen.

Another change in advance registration this semester is the method of getting into closed classes.

Terminal operators will accept only printed class permits to get into closed classes, Collins said.

Since SIS was implemented in October 1988 the Registrar's Office has made several changes.

"We have two goals: reasonable efficiency and reasonably convenient and comparable service to students," Dahl said. "We hope this will be economical and offer good service to the students."

"The next move ... is to further decentralize registration of the graduate school."

Graduate students would be serviced by the undergraduate colleges in their field of study. For example, graduate students in the College of Fine Arts would register in the College of Fine Arts.

Unions may not help college workers

Associated Press

Employees at Kentucky's public universities interested in union representation may find that a successful organizing drive won't do them any good.

The catch is that state law says university regents or trustees aren't required to recognize or bargain with employee unions.

The issue gained attention last week because the Faculty Senate at Western Kentucky University brought in United Auto Workers union representatives to provide information about collective bargaining.

"I think the frustration level of faculty is understandable, but I don't see a move among regents to embrace collective bargaining," said Gary Cox, executive director of the state Council on Higher Education.

There is some disagreement about whether university employees, who are state employees, can bargain collectively, and whether state universities legally could bargain with unions.

The federal and state constitutions allow university employees to form unions and ask college administrators to bargain with them, said state Rep. Ron Cyrus, D-Flatwoods, an official with the state AFL-CIO.

But Franklin Berry, an attorney for WKU, said state law prohibited state employees from participating in collective bargaining. Even if regents at Western wanted to negotiate with an employee union, he would advise them not to.

"It's not that you can't have a union," Berry said. "The statute says that state employees are not permitted to collectively bargain."

Faculty members at Northern Kentucky University voted in 1987 and 1988 to organize for collective bargaining under the American Association of University Professors, said NKU faculty regent Lew Wallace, who supported bargaining. Regents rejected the move.

The issue was addressed in a 1978 decision by the Kentucky Supreme Court in a case involving some non-academic UK employees who joined a national union.

The Supreme Court ruled that the University could not prohibit employees from joining a union, but that it had "no legal enforceable duty to recognize, negotiate or bargain with" any group of employees or any union representing them.

SGA candidates to discuss issues tonight

Staff reports

The four candidates for the UK Student Government Association executive branch will appear in a debate at 7:30 tonight in Memorial Hall.

Although the event is called a debate, its format resembles a joint press conference.

Candidates will make an opening statement, answer two questions each from a panel of UK students and faculty, and make a closing statement.

The candidates running for office are SGA President Sean Lohman and Dale Baldwin for president, and Sarah Cousey and Chris Woolums for vice president.

The event is sponsored by the Greek Political Action Committee, Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council.

SGA elections are scheduled for March 28-29. Following the debate, GPAC will announce its endorsements for the elections.

Henderson leads Bat Cats to victory in series finale

By BRIAN JENT
Managing Editor

Before the season began, UK baseball coach Keith Madison was searching for a third starting pitcher to face Southeastern Conference foes.

He knew the talent was there but unsure of who would prove himself. Yesterday, Madison found it.

HENDERSON

— freshman Rodney Henderson — that he was looking for. Henderson started yesterday's third game of Bat Cats' opening SEC series against the University of Georgia and proved capable of withstanding the tough conference batters.

In a 7-2 win at Shively Field, the freshman from Greensboro, Ky., went 8 1/3 innings and struck out 10 Georgia batters. The win prevented the Bulldogs from sweeping the series as Henderson's ERA rose to 1.80.

"He kept the hitters off stride and off balance by changing speeds all day long," Madison said. "I feel like Rodney can do the job."

"We also have another freshman Scott Smith who is also capable. We are just very fortunate that we have the depth that we have this year. I'm impressed with the way that our freshmen pitchers come out and show poise on the mound. I think the pitching depth is really going to pay off as the season goes on."

Besides improving Henderson's record to 3-0, the victory lifted the Bat Cats to 11-3 overall and 1-3 in the SEC. The 17th-ranked Bulldogs dropped to 20-5, 2-1 in the conference.

"They are going to make some noise," Georgia coach Steve Webber said. "They have three good pitchers, and the best, I think, we saw today. We had a couple of chances, but the way Henderson was throwing, we couldn't get anything going."

The only runs that Georgia could muster off Henderson came in the first and third innings.

With one out, Georgia's Jeff Cooper doubled off the left field wall. After advancing to third base on J.R. Showalter's single, Cooper scored on a sacrifice fly to center field to give the Bulldogs an early 1-0 lead.

Bat Cat catcher Keith Conrad hammered a second inning home run that tied the game, but Georgia countered as Showalter walked and then doubled home.

The Cats touched up Georgia freshman Tracy Wildes (2-2) for five runs before he was sent to the showers in the fifth.

In the third inning, UK sophomore first baseman Mike Harris smashed a 1-0 pitch over the right field wall and onto the football's

"I've said all along that Georgia is the best team in this league, and I still think that. It was a great win for us after those heart-breakers (Saturday)."

Keith Madison, Bat Cats coach team practice field for his fourth home run of the season to give UK a 3-2 lead.

The Bat Cats increased their lead with a run in the fourth and fifth innings. Then added a run in the seventh and eighth innings to make the final score 7-2.

"We got some real timely hitting from people like Darin Riemann, Vince Castaldo and Mike Harris," Madison said.

Madison said Georgia is the team to beat in the SEC.

"I've said all along that Georgia is the best team in this league, and I still think that," he said. "It was a great win for us after those heart-breakers (Saturday)."

The Cats were swept 4-2, 3-2 in a double-header Saturday afternoon at Shively Field.

Both games saw the Bat Cats get excellent pitching from senior Rod Bolton and junior Larry Luebbers.

Bolton (2-1) pitched the complete game and struck out 13 batters in the 4-2 loss.

Luebbers (2-1) used a little more finesse against Georgia only to lose 3-2 in eight innings.

was great this weekend. Saturday, ...we didn't hit the ball the way that we are capable of hitting it."

The Bat Cats collected a measly 8 hits in the Saturday double-header compared to the 14 yesterday.

"We could have won those two games (Saturday) if a couple of breaks would have went our way," Madison said.

Madison said that he was happy his team did not roll over and die yesterday against the Bulldogs.

"I was really proud of our team and the way they bounced back today. ... They could have come out today down about yesterday's losses, but they bounced back very well," he said.

The Georgia series was crucial for the Bat Cats to establish themselves as a SEC contender, Madison said.

Day 32: players and owners still far apart

By RONALD BLUM
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Players and owners met yesterday to see if they could come up with a formula to settle the salary arbitration eligibility issue and end the 32-day lockout.

Negotiators met for 90 minutes early Sunday and after a lunch break, resumed in the afternoon at Commissioner Fay Vincent's Park Avenue office.

A proposal was made by the owners yesterday that would make additional players eligible for arbitration by their third year, New York Yankees player representative Dave Winfield said.

Owners, while unwilling to reduce the threshold below three years, are willing to make slight changes in the definition of what a year of service time is.

Players union head Donald Fehr and Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig appeared on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," but did not indicate if an agreement was close.

The players had proposed the top half of all two-year players to be eligible for arbitration, but have told management they would settle for something less. Owners have refused to reduce the three years currently required to file.

But owners negotiator Chuck O'Connor said there might be room for movement.

O'Connor said the union's claim on this "was a legitimate argument." That led to a proposal to re-define what qualifies as a full year of service.

With all the other issues nearly settled, the two sides spent Sunday trying to find a solution on the eligibility question.

The sides have been looking for common ground on arbitration and O'Connor said he hoped the issue of what the union claims are players deliberately deprived of service time might be "a narrow piece of turf" on which the sides could agree.

Currently, players sent to the minor leagues on option for up to 20 days in a season get credit for a full year, but players sent down for 21 days do not. A year consists of 172 service days even though a season actually is 182 days long.

If the sides agreed to let players get a full year of service despite a greater number of days in the minors, additional players would be able to have their salaries decided by an arbitrator.

Owners won back the year of arbitration eligibility in 1985 when they claimed the game was losing money.

There was no formal announcement that opening day would be postponed from April 2. On Saturday, Vincent said preserving the original starting date had become "a pipe dream."

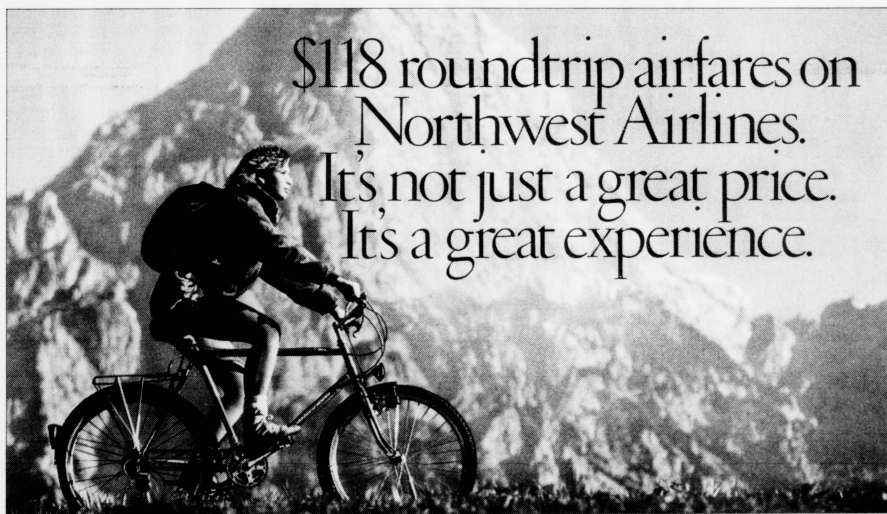

O'Connor said he believed that a full 162-game schedule could be played by each team if an agreement were reached quickly, even if games would not start on April 2.

Henry Clay claims girls Sweet 16 crown

By MIKE EMBRY
Associated Press

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. — It took a season to build a championship team at Lexington Henry Clay.

The Lady Blue Devils became the first 11th Region team to win the Girls State Tournament when they defeated Louisville Southern 62-50 Saturday night in E.A. Diddle Arena.

"We were a young team at the beginning of the season," said Henry Clay coach Bob Tripure. "We start three 10th-graders, one junior and one senior. I knew it would take time to mesh. I was patient with them."

Henry Clay lost two games in December and two in January before everything clicked. "I could see us coming together all the time," Tripure said.

And for four days in the 29th girls tourney, the Lady Devils were at the top of their game in beating Oldham County 66-46, Marshall County 57-53 and Louisville Manual 72-66 to earn a shot at the title.

"They're very deserving of being state champions," Southern coach Bill Brown said of Henry Clay.

"They've played better all week than anybody."

All-state center Demetria Bright saved her best effort for the championship game, scoring 16 of her 22 points to stake the Lady Devils to a big first-half lead.

"Demetria is a great player but she hadn't had great games in the first three," Tripure said. "I thought she was pressing a little bit."

Before the game, he had a pep talk with his star player.

"I told her, I have a feeling you're going to have a great game," the Henry Clay coach said. "And she said, I do too."

Bright, who will attend Iowa next fall, also had eight rebounds, blocked four shots and had three steals.

"I did think I was pressing a little bit," said Bright, who was voted the tourney's Most Valuable Player award. "I didn't feel like I had performed up to expectations."

The Lady Devils didn't waste any time taking charge of the game. Bright had three baskets during a 10-2 spurt in the second quarter that gave Henry Clay a 28-14 lead.

"I was moving and finding open spots in their zone," said Bright. "I thought I was a little quicker than their big people and I felt I could take over."

Second-ranked Henry Clay, 32-4, later went on an 11-2 run in the third quarter behind Shirley Bryant's six points to widen the margin to 45-22 at 3:33 before 2,315 fans.

Southern, on the verge of suffering the biggest defeat in tourney championship game history, staged a furious rally behind all-state guard Michelle Burden, who scored 21 of her 25 points in the second half, but the fifth-ranked Lady Trojans could get no closer than nine.

"This is the most satisfying season I have coached because the kids came so far in four months," he said. "I'm really proud of them."

Yesterday, Oakland manager Tony La Russa said he feared there would be injuries if players had less than three weeks of spring training.

"But if they said we had to get it done, we would have to," said La Russa, who has suggested that teams play split-squad games once the exhibition schedule starts.

The union's executive board met for nearly five hours Saturday and turned down the proposal owners made on Friday.

That plan calls for a $100,000 minimum, $5,000 less than the union wants, and a $55 million yearly contribution to the pension plan, which players say is basically acceptable. But it made no movement on arbitration or mention of service time, language.

The union's executive board voted unanimously Saturday to support its negotiating committee and instructed it to "make the best effort to reach an agreement."

"The players, to a man, have two views," Fehr said, "that they want to play baseball as soon as they can, but they want to play under an appropriate collective bargaining agreement."

Jackson leaves LSU for NBA

By SKIP LATT
Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Chris Jackson says the memories of his short but productive stay at Louisiana State University will always be with him.

"I'll always have great memories of LSU, the coaching staff and the players," Jackson, a 6-1 sophomore guard, said after announcing he will make himself available for the 1990 NBA draft.

"Without the coaching staff and the players, I wouldn't have been able to do the things I've done the last two years. LSU is the greatest university and I'll never forget the times I've had there."

Jackson made his intentions known Saturday night after Georgia Tech defeated LSU 94-91 in the second round of the Southeast Regional.

"I know in my mind what I can do and I leave it in God's hands," Jackson said. "I just go out and do what I can do."

What Jackson did at LSU was put on a sparkling display of long-range shooting as he became a two-time All-American and the first in the Southeastern Conference to win back-to-back player of the year awards since Tennessee's Bernard King in 1975 and 1976.

In only two seasons Jackson became the No. 6 all-time LSU scorer with 1,854 points, led the Tigers to two NCAA tournaments and a 43-21 record.

The Tigers finished the 1989 season with a 23-9 record and were ranked 19th in the final Associated Press poll.

The Gulfport, Miss., native led the SEC in scoring each season with averages of 30.2 in 1989 and 28.7 this season.

Jackson twice set the NCAA Division I record for points in a game by a freshman, scoring 53 at Florida in 1989 and then collecting 55 at Mississippi later that season.

Only the second freshman to be accorded first-team All-American honors by The Associated Press, Jackson said the decision to turn pro was his alone.

"My mother told me it was my decision to make and she said, 'When you make the decision, don't look back,'" Jackson said. "Coach (Dale) Brown didn't want me to leave, but he was very supportive. He didn't tell me what to do. He just told me the pros and cons. He said it was my decision."

Brown said he was sad to see Jackson leave school, but could understand his ambition.

"I'll never have anything but the highest admiration for him," Brown said. "What he's done has been inspired by God. He's a far greater human being than he is a basketball player."

The decision to turn pro was reached within the last few weeks, but Jackson said he was not prepared to go public until LSU had finished his season.

"It was hard to tell the guys because I feel so much for the guys and the coaches," Jackson said. "I wanted to stop all speculation with my teammates and get it out of the way."

"My college career has turned out better than I expected and I just figured now was the time (to turn pro). Things just started floating through my mind."

Jackson said he had no idea where he might be chosen in this year's draft, but did say he knew he would have to work hard at improving his game.

"In the NBA, I will have to continue to work on everything — my strength, my shot, everything. I will just take it one day at a time."

Students' voices should be heard at GPAC debate

One of the complaints many students lodge against the UK Student Government Association is that it does not respond to students' needs. But at 7:30 tonight at Memorial Hall students have an opportunity to formally meet the four candidates for the SGA executive branch.

SGA President Sean Lohman and Dale Baldwin are running for the top spot, and Sarah Coursey and Chris Woolums for vice president.

The four candidates will participate tonight in a "debate" sponsored by the Greek Political Action Committee, the Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council.

Following tonight's debate, students should make an effort to meet the candidates and discuss ideas about how student government can be more responsive to students' needs.

Although voters will not be able to hear all of the candidates' views tonight, it will be a good opportunity for students to meet the campus' leaders.

Although time is limited, here are a few issues we think the candidates should address at tonight's debate:

Handicapped Services: The University has made several strides in making the campus more accessible to handicapped students, but several areas on campus are not totally accessible to the handicapped.

International Student Fee: As the enrollment of international students increases each year, some international students feel that the fees imposed on them are not justified in light of the services they receive from the University.

SGA's Role: Last semester Chancellor for the Lexington Campus Robert Hemenway unveiled a 10-point plan to improve the Lexington Campus. The next student government president should take a similar course in describing what SGA's role on campus is and what it can do to improve the quality of campus life. The purpose of such a plan would clearly outline to students what SGA is all about and what it hopes to achieve.

Presidential Search: When the 10-member committee was appointed in January to select the next UK president, undergraduate interests were snubbed. The next student government president must describe how he will ensure that the University does not overlook student interests in the future.

Minority Recruitment: A recent student revealed that minority enrollment at UK has not increased significantly since 1978. Kentucky Council on Higher Education student member Jim Hill recently said that the University has not done enough to attract minority professors and students.

Kernel Checklist

A weekly service of the Viewpoint Page to keep its readers abreast of the hot items of the universe.

Thanks, Nick. Nicholas J. Pisacano. There probably were people who loved the University of Kentucky more than UK trustee Nicholas J. Pisacano, but you would be hard-pressed to find one. His Introduction to Biology class was popular and one of the most difficult classes freshmen could take. As one student who took the class remarked last week, he wanted to earn an A in the class because of the way Pisacano taught the class. In addition to teaching students about biology, Pisacano told them that regardless of what profession you choose, it is important to get a well-rounded, liberal arts education so one can make society a better place.

Divine Intervention. General Assembly. A priest asked his parish recently to pray that the state's leaders make decisions in the commonwealth's best interest. Something must have gotten into lawmakers and the governor's office as the two sides finally reached a compromise on how to finance the school reform package. Now lawmakers must finish passing the 900-page bill in lightning time.

How Sweet It Is. NCAA Tournament. The college basketball season is down to the final 16 teams, and once again UK is not among them. As the Wildcats serve the first year of a three-year probation from the NCAA, about the only satisfaction UK fans could have from this year's tournament is that the University of Louisville was upset by Ball State University.

Fans Locked Out. Baseball Lockout. The nation enters its 33rd day with no baseball, which is not unlike a continuation of winter for many people. As arbitration continues to be an impasse, owners would do well to remember that free agency guaranteed parity in baseball when since it was first declared 22 years ago. The real losers are the baseball fans, who might consider going on strike if this matter is not resolved soon.

Rebirth of A Nation. Lithuania. Soviet President Mikhail's Gorbachev threat to Lithuania ends today as the Baltic republic has been as well as to rejoin the Soviet Union or else. But as other Soviet republics held hostage contemplate their sovereignty, the incident illustrates that Gorbachev cannot have perestroika and his empire, too.

Kernel Topic: The Oscars

On March 26 the Academy of Fine Arts and Dramatics will present the Oscars, the only award that shares its name with a hodge.

Winning an Oscar is a very hard thing to do, at least if you're under 50. Many actors strive their whole lifetimes making artsy movies that no one goes to see just so they can win an Oscar, while others make millions doing "Parkys" films.

Of course, after a film gets nominated for an Oscar everyone has to go see it or they think they're uncultured.

This year there is a brilliant crop of films nominated for this distinguished award. Morgan Freeman and Jessica Tandy are nominated for best actor and actress, respectively, for their film "Driving Miss Daisy." The film is also up for a best picture award. It is a film about a black chauffeur who likes driving around this old Jewish woman named Miss Daisy. It is the first time in recent memory that a fantasy film is up for an Oscar.

I believe the sequel is going to be called "Driving Miss Daisy in the Indianapolis 500."

"Born of the Fourth of July," the gripping story of Ron Kovic's transformation from Oliver North to an Abbie Hoffman double, is also nominated for best picture.

The star, Tom Cruise, is also up for a best actor award. Cruise is my favorite for the award because he portrays Kovic as Bono, the lead singer of U2, with a mustache.

Michelle Pfeiffer is nominated for best actress for her portrayal of Suzie Diamond in the "Fabulous Baker Boys." I was struck by Pfeiffer imitating an erotic dancer on top of Jeff Bridges piano while singing "Making Whoopee." I think she could get a job at Pure Gold if acting doesn't pan out.

Daniel Day-Lewis is nominated for best actor and his movie, "My Left Foot," is nominated for best picture. "Foot" is the true story of an Irishman with cerebral palsy who could write and paint with, you guessed it, his left foot. Day-Lewis' films are always interesting, but I doubt he or the film will win because the academy hates minority movies.

Spike Lee was angry because his film "Do the Right Thing" was not nominated for best picture and he was not nominated for best director. He was nominated for writing the screenplay and Danny Aiello was nominated for best supporting actor for his portrayal of Sal, the pizza store owner, in the film.

I'm afraid Mr. Lee will have to settle for two out of four, which isn't bad considering the various awards given out by groups all over the country are just popularity contests, and the Oscars are no exception. At least he gets to dress up in a tux and hang out with the members of the Academy (and he can make inroads for his next film).

Census ignores the 'invisible' homeless

Tomorrow the U.S. Census Bureau will attempt to count America's homeless. Many homeless advocates and service providers across the country are very concerned about the inability of census workers to count more than a fraction of the homeless, and the use to which these numbers will be put.

Advocates of the homeless and service providers understand that the federal government is legally obligated to try to count everyone, and that localities such as Lexington want every effort made to count the homeless. Municipalities want to revenues that the added numbers represent.

Counting homeless people in shelters or in jails and hospitals (who were homeless when they went in and will be homeless when they come out) can yield useful information.

The problems arise when an effort is made to count the vast majority of homeless Americans — those for whom there is not room in the shelters — hidden homeless.

Experience quickly teaches the homeless that to be identified as such is to risk harassment, expulsion or abuse.

In a study recently in Chicago, researchers approached 318 homeless-looking people within a few blocks in the downtown area very early one morning. Only 23 or the 318 identified themselves as homeless. Applying that ratio to the rest of the city, researchers concluded that there were only 3,000 homeless people in Chicago — a tiny fraction of the prevalent estimates.

In fact, just one service provider saw four times that number of different homeless people in less than a year. Why the disparity? The vast majority of the destitute simply will not identify themselves as homeless.

Not can homeless people outside of shelters be found to be counted. The experience of one group is instructive. Members of the Community for Creative Non-violence have worked and lived with the homeless of Washington, D.C., for 17 years.

Guest OPINION

Yet not even they could find more than a few hundred homeless people on any given night out of a street population estimated at more than 10,000 (not including those in shelters).

If CCNV — or census-takers — could find them, so could others who might hunt or harass them. They remain well-hidden if they are to survive.

There are 6,000,000 units of abandoned housing in the United States. You would have to place a census-worker in front and in back of these buildings simultaneously. Every garage, every car with an unlocked door, every bridge, every alley, every park or wooded area, every conceivable space that homeless people might utilize would have to be observed — simultaneously.

That is not going to happen because the U.S. Census Bureau will employ only 10,000 people to do the counting. That's not many considering the places they have to look at. Furthermore, census workers will "count selected portions of the homeless population."

They will not enter abandoned buildings. Instead, for only a couple of hours tomorrow night, they will post enumerators outside relatively few of the buildings which they think are used by the homeless.

Jails, shelters and hospitals will provide the remaining data. And that is only in cities and large towns. The Kentucky Coalition for the Homeless perceives rural homelessness to be as serious as its urban counterpart, if not more so.

I am aware of no Census Bureau plan to collect data in rural America, and I don't think Kentucky is unique in having many homeless in the countryside.

Isn't it better to count as many homeless people as possible, rather than not try to count them at all?

I can't shout yes because I don't think those responsible for collecting and controlling the information gathered tomorrow can be trusted to use the data honestly and fairly. I'm leery about government policy-makers, about elected politicians beholden to individuals and groups representing the interests of the few.

Since 1984 the Reagan and Bush administrations and some members of Congress have done everything possible to minimize and trivialize the problem of homelessness in America — statistically, at least — as a way of reducing pressure on themselves to do something about it.

In 1984 the office of Housing and Urban Development conducted a study of 60 cities in an attempt to determine the size of the homeless population nationally.

The study was fraudulent and contained thoroughly cooked numbers. Estimates were collected for those 60 cities, but instead of applying those estimates to the city population for which they were elicited, the estimates were applied to the arcane "Randomly Metropolitan Areas-RMA's."

I'm not paranoid in thinking that their intent is to prove that the problem of affordable housing isn't as serious as every indicator, including our own experiences and our sense, tells us it is.

By reducing the magnitude of the problem of homelessness in America — on paper, at least — we take from the homeless what little is left them, their existence.

For these reasons, Washington, D.C.'s CCNV is refusing to cooperate with this effort. On Jan. 21 they publicly burned the census forms they had received, vowing not to cooperate with tomorrow's effort and encouraged others across the country to do the same.

When the "official" count of homeless people in the United States is announced in Washington, D.C., I won't believe it, I can't believe it. It will trivialize the growing tragedy of America's homeless adults and the rapidly increasing number of homeless children.

OSU chief to speak at Honors

Ohio State University President Edward H. Jennings will deliver the Honors Day address April 24 at UK.

JENNINGS

Honors Day, an annual convocation celebrating academic achievement and honoring outstanding faculty, staff and students, is set for 3 p.m. in the Concert Hall of the Singletary Cen-

Ohio State has an enrollment of 58,994 with more than 52,000 students on the Columbus campus — the largest student body on a single campus in the United States.

The university ranks 31st nationally in research and development.

Jennings, who has a doctorate in finance, is credited with raising $401.2 million in the first four years of a five-year Ohio State fund-raising campaign.
