All Future Foes But Vanderbilt Match Wildcats' Poor Showing

'Bama, Tennessee Lose All Chances For Bowl Games

By JIM BROWN
That Kentucky's Wildcats won't get a chance to upset bowl aspirations of either Alabama or Tennessee this year was made fairly certain Saturday. Both the Crimson Tide and the Volunteers went down to defeats that, due to their surprising decisiveness, all but erased the last vestige of hope for a post-season encounter for either.

The defeat of the mighty Red Elephants by lightly regarded Mississippi State stood out as probably the nation's biggest upset of the day, but Tennessee's loss to a hard-driving Duke eleven, although not entirely unexpected, was a distinct shock because of the size of the score.

In fact, all of Kentucky's future foes, with the exception of Vanderbilt, seemed to be trying to match the Wildcats' poor showing against Washington & Lee Generals as they either lost or turned in unimpressive performances. Three victories and four defeats was the record hung up over the weekend by teams remaining on the Wildcat schedule.

FOES' SCORES

Here is the way Wildcat foes fared in Saturday's games:
Vanderbilt 42, Tennessee Tech 0
Xavier 21, St. Vincent 7 (Sunday)
West Virginia 0, Navy 40
Alabama 0, Mississippi State 14
Georgia Tech 20, Chattanooga 0
Southwestern 0, Mississippi 27
Tennessee 0, Duke 11
Vanderbilt's Commodores, Saturday foe of the Cats, had little trouble romping over a completely outclassed Tennessee Tech eleven. Vandy, with what is conceded to be its most aggressive team in years, could not manage to score until twelve minutes of the game had been played. After they pushed over their initial tally they had little difficulty in ripping the Tech defenses to shreds and scoring at will.

The score is not the only figure that shows the Commodore's overwhelming superiority. They made 21 first downs to none for Tech, and they rolled up 466 yards from scrimmage to a minus 14 for the engineers. Tech never did penetrate into Vandy territory, while the Nashville villains, using straight football mixed with plenty of passes, scored in every quarter.

Alabama's loss at the hands of the Mississippi State's Maroons stunned a crowd of 20,000 at Tuscaloosa, most of whom had expected the Tide to win handily. Outweighed by the Alabamians at every position, Mississippi State outplayed their opponents throughout. The Mississippians had the Red Elephants on the defensive throughout most of the first half, and in the third and fourth quarters they drove over for the only two touchdowns of the game.

The Duke-Tennessee affair, which was witnessed by 48,000 spectators at Durham, saw the Volunteers go down to their first regular-season loss since 1937. Duke exploded three touchdowns in the first half and then settled down to defensive football in the second half to inflict a defeat even more crushing than the 19-0 score indicated.

Georgia Tech, which has a date with Notre Dame Saturday, probably was thinking only of the Irish and gave a ragged, indifferent performance in turning back Chattanooga's Moccasins. The Engineers were able to score only once in the first three periods but managed to push over two markers in the final quarter to make the score 20-0.

West Virginia and Southwestern both were trounced soundly in their weekend contests. Navy staged a field day at the expense of the Mountaineers and pranced off with a 40-0 verdict, while Southwestern added to Mississippi's homecoming enjoyment by falling before the Rebels, 27-0.

Xavier, playing a Sunday game, traveled to Latrobe, Penn., and triumphed over the St. Vincent college Bearcats, 21-7.

The Alpha Tau Omega fraternity team loomed as the favorite to win the intramural football championship by displaying the best offense in the tournament with a convincing 18-0 win over the Alpha Sigma Phi's during last week's play.

Elsewhere in the leagues, it was mostly battles of defensive teams, and games were decided by the margins of first downs rather than six-pointers.

All was not peaches and cream over at Lexington, Va., last Saturday—at least from one point of view. Ab Kirwan's boys met more opposition than the Wildcat followers had anticipated, and the result was that the Wildcats were able to score but one touchdown, their margin of victory.

Immediately, Kentucky's stock took a dive among the home followers, and the more pessimistic of the pessimists envisaged a slaughter of Kentucky at the hands of the Commodores this week. Their sagging spirits dropped down in the region of their brogans when news of Vandy's one-sided victory over TPI was aired.

While lingering in one of the down-town brew emporiums on Saturday night, places where one can always find the results of the nation's grid contests, we were approached by one of these crying specimens. With tears in his eyes and visibly shaking from head to foot, he walked in a plaintive tone, "Oh, what Vandy isn't going to do to us! They'll murder our poor boys. Oh, it's awful!"

His pitiable condition quite unsettled us. Choking back our rising tears, we patted him on the back, asked him to cheer up, and to try to see things in a better light. "After all, old Vandy isn't so bad," we said. "He's just a natural!" He sneezed anything; Kentucky just got bad breaks. Everything will turn out all right."

OLD PEP TALK

We continued to give him the old pep talk and to point out that every team has a gloomy Saturday at least once a year. We showed him that sometimes a team gets hot and plays over his head. Pretty soon he brightened up enough to offer us 3-1 that Vandy would take Kentucky. Such a proposition being highly obnoxious (3-1 might have been different story), we left him in his ignorant and lachrymose state.

WHAT CATS NEEDED

And the W & L game may have been what we needed. It pointed out the mistakes, showed where polish is needed, and stressed the importance of working together. If the Wildcats had beaten the Generals by a big score there might have been a little difficulty in adjusting their helmets on Saturday. As it is now the Wildcats certainly shouldn't be bothered with over-confidence next Saturday.
